BI'LBO. n. s. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compassed like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head. Shakesp.

BI'LBOES. n. s. A sort of stocks or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea.

Methought I lay
Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Shakesp.

BILE. n. s. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to sheathe or blunt the acids of the chyle, because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels. Quincy.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver sever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall pipe, here unload
Their yellow streams. Blackmore.

BILE. n. s. [bile, Sax. perhaps from bilis, Lat.] This is generally spelt boil;

but, I think, less properly.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter:
Or rather a disease that 's in my flesh;
Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood. Shakesp.

Those biles did run—say so—did not the general run? were not that a botchy sore? Shakesp.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension. Wiseman.

BI'LIARY. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus. Arbuthnot.

BI'LINGSGATE. n. s. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilingsgate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground,
And shameful billingsgate her robes adorn. Pope.

BILI'NGUOUS. adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking, two tongues.

BI'LIOUS. adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,
And floods of chyle in silver currents run. Garth.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundance of a bilious alkali. Arbuthnot.

To BILK. v. a [derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothick bilaican.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt, and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen stood prepar'd. Dryd.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing sight
Of your bilk'd hopes? Dryd.

BILL. n. s. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon.

In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.

No crowing cock does there his wings display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL. n. s. [bille, tpibille, Sax. a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the sickle or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe.

Yea distaff women manage rusty bills;
Against thy seat both young and old rebel. Shak.

BILL. n. s. [billet, Fr.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive
Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shakesp.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no? Shakesp.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.

The medicine was prepared according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. [In law.]

1. An obligation, but without condition, or forfeiture for non-payment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes: but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Cowell.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreased. Graunt.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill Dryd

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbuthnot.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To caress, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Alcyone compress'd
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,
The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.

BI'LLET. n. s. billet, French.]

1. A small paper; a note.

When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Cæsar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet-doux, or a soft billet; a love-letter.

'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true,
Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux. Pope.

4. [Bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney.

Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a fagot or billet is dilated and rarified to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Bodies.

Their billet at the fire was found. Prior.

To BI'LLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:
Away, I say. Shakesp.

2. To quarter soldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Raleigh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

BI'LLIARDS. n. s. without a singular, [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balyards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Balyards much unfit,
And shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Hubberd's Tale.

A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakesp.

Even nose and cheek withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonson.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

BI'LLOW. n. s [bilge, Germ. bolg, Dan. probably of the same original with bilx, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swoln, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver cleen,
His tumbling billows rolls with gentle rore. Spenser.

Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Wotton.

Chasing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom. Denham.

To BI'LLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing storm, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BI'LLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson.

BIN. n. s. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is reposited.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer.

As when, from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot sallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BI'NARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BI'NARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chamb.

BI'SCUIT. n s. [from bis twice, Lat. and cuit baked, Fr.]

1. A kind of hard dry bread, made to be carried to sea: it is baked for long voyages four times.

The biscuit also in the ships, especially in the Spanish gallies, was grown hoary, and unwholesome. Knolles's Hist.

Many have been cured of dropsies by abstinence from drinks, eating dry biscuit, which creates no thirst, and strong frictions four or five times a-day. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. A composition of fine flour, almonds, and sugar, made by the confectioners.

To BISE'CT. v. a. [from binus and seco to cut, Lat.] To divide into two parts.

The rational horizon bisecteth the globe into two equal parts. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

BISE'CTION. n. s. [from the verb] A geometrical term, signifying the division of any quantity into two equal parts.

BI'SHOP. n. s. [From ἐπίσκοπος, Lat. the Saxons formed biscop, which was afterwards softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.

A bishop is an overseer, or superintendant, of religious matters in the Christian church. Ayliffe's Parergon

You shall find him well accompany'd
With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops. Shakesp.

Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service, than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops.
K. Charles.

In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estates, with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church. South.

On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office and the letters or sound; for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office, though there is not one letter alike in them.
Watts's Log.

Bi'shop. n. s. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Fine oranges,
Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup,
They'll make a sweet bishop, when gentlefolks sup.
Swift.

BLA'DDER. n. s. [blabbne, Saxon; blader, Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.

The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatable, for receiving and containing the urine till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those, that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakesp.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLADDER-NUT. n. s. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-SENA. n. s. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

BLADE. n. s. [blæb, bleb, Sax. bled, Fr.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to be the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes, t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE. n. s. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He sought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. Fairy Queen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her sabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam, whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, Sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.

Then, turning about to the hangman, he said, Dispatch me, I pri'thee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the Shoulder. } n. s. The bone

BLAME. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confest to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakesp.

3. Hurt. Not now in use.

Therewith upon his crest
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French a tort; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakesp.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner. Stillingfleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior

BLA'MEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakesp.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakesp.

To which his pride presum'd to give the law. Dryden.
Not far from the said well, blowing up a rock, he formerly observed some of these. Woodward.

14. To infect with the eggs of flies. I know not how this sense belongs to the word.
I would no more endure
This wooden slavery, than I would suffer
The flesh-fly blow my mouth. Shakesp.
Rather at Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies
Blow me into abhorring. Shakesp.

15. To blow upon. To make stale.
I am wonderfully pleased, when I meet with any passage in an old Greek or Latin author, that is not blown upon, and which I have never met with in any quotation. Addison.
He will whisper an intrigue that is not yet blown upon by common fame. Addison.

To BLOW, v. n. [blopan, Saxon.] To bloom; to blossom.
We lose the prime, to mark how spring
Our tender plants, how blows the citron grove,
What drops the myrrh, and what the balmy reed Milton
This royal fair
Shall, when the blossom of her beauty 's blown,
See her great brother on the British throne Waller.
Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows;
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.
For thee Idume's spicy forests blow,
And seeds of gold in Ophir's mountains glow. Pope.

More than their own. Shakesp. Othello.

3. To hold wounds together with a compress.

The practice of bolstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sharp.

4. To support; to hold up; to maintain. This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.

We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bolster errour. Hooker.

The lawyer sets his tongue to sale for the bolstering out of unjust causes. Hakewill.

It was the way of many to bolster up their crazy doating consciences with confidences. South.

BOLT. n. s. [boult, Dutch; βόλις.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a crossbow.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;
It fell upon a little western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound. Shakesp.

The blunted bolt against the nymph he drest;
But with the sharp transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dry.

2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.

Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd,
With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.

3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.

Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisteth of long striæ, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright like the bristles of a stiff brush. Grew.

As I stood bolt upright upon one end, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.

4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow. We now say, shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.

'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Shakesp.

5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner. This is, I think, corrupted from bought, or link.

Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him. Shakesp.

To BOLT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.

The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Arcite stood aghast. Dry.

2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milt.

3. To fasten, as a bolt or pin; to pin; to keep together.

That I could reach the axle, where the pins are
Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out! Ben Jonson.

4. To fetter; to shackle.

It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakesp.

5. To sift, or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve. [bluter, Fr.]

He now had boulted all the flour. Spenser.

In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.

I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.

6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.

It would be well bolted out, whether great refractions may not be made upon reflections, as upon direct beams. Bacon.

The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attornies, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.

Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Estrange.

7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.

The fanned snow,
That 's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er. Shakesp.

To BOLT. v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.

This Puck seems but a dreaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And oft out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fastnesses, and sometimes back to their den. Bacon

As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the ruins to save herself. L'Estrange.

I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have shot themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd;
And beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest bar'd. Dryden.

BOLT-ROPE. n. s. [from bolt and rope.] The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened. Sea Dict.

BO'LTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakesp.

With a good strong chopping knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Bacon's Natural History.

When superciliously he sifts
Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudibras.

2. A kind of net.

These hakes, and divers others of the forecited, are taken with threads, and some of them with the bolter, which is a spiller of a bigger size. Carew.

BO'LTHEAD. n. s. A long straight-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrass, or receiver.

This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquor into a bolthead with a long narrow neck. Boyle.

BO'LTING-HOUSE. n. s. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.

The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennis.

BO'LTSPRIT. } n. s. A mast running out
BO'WSPRIT. } at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but-end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltsprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Bowsprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dict.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and boltsprit, would I flame distinctly. Shakesp.

BO'LUS. n. s. [βόλος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wiseman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising bolus es and pills. Swift.

BOMB. n. s. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusee, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusee, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence: whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chamb.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaught'ring bomb Gradivus roars. Rowe.

To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,
Whilst Villeroy, who ne'er afraid is,
To Bruxelles marches on secure,
To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies. Prior

BOMB-CHEST. n. s. [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it. Chambers.

BOMB-KETCH. } n. s. A kind of ship
BOMB-VESSEL. } strongly built, to bear the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal gallies and men of war. Addison on Italy.

BOMBARD. n. s. [bombardus, Lat.]

1. A great gun; a cannon: it is a word now obsolete.

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, wherewith they threw huge stones into the air, which falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Knolles.

2. A barrel. Obsolete.

To BOMBA'RD. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English failing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Addison.

BOMBARDI'ER. n. s. [from bombard.] The engineer whose employment it is to shoot bombs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of the city, with a design to fill all around him with terrour and combustion Tatler.

BOMBA'RDMENT. n. s. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Addison.

BOMBASI'N. n s. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus silken, Lat.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning.

BOMBA'ST. n. s. [A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, thence used to signify bulk or shew without solidity.] Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this. Donne.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden.

BO'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war. Shakesp.

BOMBULA'TION. n. s. [from bombus, Lat.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixed in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

BOMBY'CINOUS adj. [bombycinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk.

BONA'ROBA. n. s. [Ital. a fine gown.] A shewy wanton.

We knew where the bona robas were. Shakesp.

BONA'SUS. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of buffalo, or wild bull.

BONCHRE'TIEN. n. s. [French.] A species of pear, so called probably from the name of a gardener.

BOND. n. s. [bonb, Sax. bound; it is written indifferently, in many of its senses, bond, or band. See BAND.]

1. Cords, or chains, with which any one is bound.

There left me, and my man, both bound together;
Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakesp.

2. Ligament that holds any thing together.

Let any one send his contemplation to the extremities of the universe, and see what conceivable hoops, what bond he can imagine, to hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together. Locke

3. Union; connexion: a workman's term.

Observe, in working up the walls, that no side of the house, nor any part of the walls, be brought up three feet above the other, before the next adjoining wall be brought up to it, so that they may be all joined together, and make a good bond. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. [In the plural.] Chains; imprisonment; captivity.

Whom I perceived to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds. Acts, xxiii 29.

5. Cement of union; cause of union; link of connexion.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed! Shakesp.

Love cools, brothers divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakesp. K. Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond. Shakesp.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dry.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakesp.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adv. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebonden, Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. 1 Cor. xii. 13.

BO'NDAGE. n. s. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?
—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility. Shakesp.

Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard,
Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dry.

2. Obligation; tye of duty.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love, which gives the story its turn that way Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BO'NDMAID. n. s. [from bond captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakesp.

BO'NDMAN. n. s. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the publick magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. s. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Leviticus, xxv. 39.

BONDSE'RVICE. n. s. [from bond and service.] The condition of a bond servant; slavery.

Upon those did Solomon levy a tribute of bond-service. Kings.

BO'NDSLAVE. n. s. [from bond and slave.] A man in slavery; one of servile condition, who cannot change his master.

Love enjoined such diligence, that no apprentice, no, no bond-slave, could ever be, by fear, more ready at all commands than that young princess was. Sidney.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a free-woman she is become a bondslave. 1 Macc ii. 11.

Commonly the bondslave is fed by his lord, but here the lord was fed by his bondslave. Sir J. Davies.

BO'NDSMAN. [from bond and man.]

1. A slave.

Carnal greedy people, without such a precept, would have no mercy upon their poor bondsmen and beasts. Derham.

2. A person bound, or giving security, for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN. n. s. [from bond and woman.] A woman slave.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen
Ben Jonson's Cataline.

BONE. n. s. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal, made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fœtus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells; or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Mac.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Æsop's hounds contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone.
Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puss had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel.
L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice:
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BO'NELACE. n. s. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator.

BO'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dasht the brains out Shakesp.

To BO'NESET. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bonesetting. Wiseman's Surgery.

BO'NESETTER. n. s. [from boneset.] A chirurgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bone setter. Denham.

BO'NFIRE. n. s. [from bon good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfires make all day. Spenser.

How came so many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

BO'NGRACE. n. s. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Not now used. Skinner.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bongrace, and chaplet. Hakewill on Providence.

BO'NNET. n. s. [bonet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee bussing the stones; for, in such business,
Action is eloquence. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

BO'NNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the saliant angles of the glacis.

BO'NNET à prestre, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three saliant angles, and two inwards.

BO'NNETS. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainsail, and foresail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

BO'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

BO'NNINESS. n. s. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY. adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr. It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Shak.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicksome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shakesp.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. n. s. A word used in Ireland for sour buttermilk.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Nor are we studious to enquire,
Who votes for manors, who for hire. Swift.

BO'NUM MAGNUM. n. s. A species of plum.

BO'NY. adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bony limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympanum. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

BO'OBY. n. s. [a word of no certain etymology. Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef, ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo foolish, Spanish. Junius finds bowbard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby: but the original of bowbard is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find;
That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind.
Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the booby dine. King.

BOOK. n. s. [boc, Sax. supposed from boc a beech, because they wrote on beechen boards; as liber, in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shakesp.

Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. Shak.

In the coffin that had the books, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; when read the first is these chapters past. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life
Is nobler than attending for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakesp.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their birth, and may have public audience but once. Hooker.

To BOOK. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it Shakesp.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Davies on Ireland

BOOK-KEEPING. n. s. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

BO'OKBINDER. n. s. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to cover books.

BO'OKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'ning to himself appears. Pope.

BO'OKISH. adj. [from book.] Given to books; acquainted only with books. It is generally used contemptuously.

I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.
Shakesp.

I'm not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the 'scape. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Xantippe follows her namesake; being married to a bookish man, who has no knowledge of the world. Spectator.

BO'OKISHNESS. n. s. [from bookish.] Much application to books; over-studiousness.

BOOKLE'ARNED. adj. [from book and learned.] Versed in books, or literature: a term implying some slight contempt.

What'er these booklearn'd blockheads say,
Solon's the veriest fool in all the play. Dryd.

He will quote passages out of Plato and Pindar, at his own table, to some booklearned companion, without blushing. Swift

BOOKLE'ARNING. n. s. [from book and learning.] Skill in literature; acquaintance with books: a term of some contempt.

They might talk of booklearning what they would, but he never saw more unfeaty fellows than great clerks. Sidney.

Neither does it so much require booklearning and scholarship, as good natural sense, to distinguish true and false, and to discern what is well proved, and what is not. Burnet's Theory.

BO'OKMAN. n. s. [from book and man.] A man whose profession is the study of books.

This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his bookmen; for here 'tis abus'd.
Shakesp.

BO'OKMATE. n. s. [from book and mate.] Schoolfellow.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court,
A phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shakesp.

BO'OKSELLER. n. s. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity. Walton.

BO'OKWORM. n. s. [from book and worm.]

1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Guard.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgment.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope's Letters

BO'OLY. n. s. [An Irish term.]

All the Tartarians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in hordes; being the very same that the Irish boolies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats. Spens

BOOM. n. s. [from boom a tree, Dutch.]

To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth. Shak.

Every busy little scribbler now
Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend. Rose.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduc'd at last to hiss in my own dragon. Pope.

BRAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conquest
Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakesp.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,
Where most may wonder. Milton.

BRAGGADO'CIO. n. s. [from brag.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarons, in the masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected. L'Estrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRA'GGARDISM. n. s. [from brag.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

BRA'GGART. adj. [from brag.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high born or rais'd men
Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee
To th' huffing, braggart, puft nobility? Donne.

BRA'GGART. n. s. [from brag.] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart,
Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass. Shak.

BRA'GGER. n. s. [from brag.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty and insipid. South.

BRA'GLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.—
——If it is so, bragless let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he. Shakesp.

BRA'GLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

Seest not thilk hawthorn stud,
How bragly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head?
Flora now calleth forth each flower.
And bids him make ready Maia's bow'r. Shakesp.

To* BRAID. v. a. [bnædan, Saxon.] To weave together.

Close the serpent sly,
Insinuating, wove with gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal guile
Gave proof unheeded. Milton.

Osier wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but, when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Boyle.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose, and wanton'd in the wind. Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoe disdains the street. Gay.

BRAID. n. s. [from the verb.] A texture; a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Listen where thou art sitting,
Under the glossy, cool, translucent wave,
Intwisted braids of lilies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping hair. Milton.

No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound. Prior.

BRAID. adj. [To brede, in Chaucer, is to deceive.] An old word, which seems to signify deceitful.

Since Frenchmen are so braid,
Marry 'em that will. I'll live and die a maid. Shakespeare.

BRAILS. n. s. [sea term.] Small ropes, reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles. Their use is, when the sail is furled across, to hail up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall. Harris.

BRAIN. n. s. [bnæzen, Sax. breyne, Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinerea, or glandulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervea. Cheselden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

That man proportionably hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large cranies, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes, and woodcocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one, but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond.

19. To break out. To discover itself in sudden effects.

Let not one spark of filthy lustful fire
Break out, that may her sacred peace molest.
Spenser.
They smother and keep down the flame of the mischief, so as it may not break out in their time of government; what comes afterwards, they care not. Spenser.
Such a deal of wonder has broken out within this hour, that ballad makers cannot be able to express it. Shakesp.
As fire breaks out of flint by percussion, so wisdom and truth issueth out by the agitation of argument. Howel.
Fully ripe, his swelling fate breaks out,
And hurries him to mighty mischiefs on. Dryden.
All turn'd their sides, and to each other spoke;
I saw their words break out in fire and smoke.
Dryden.
Like a ball of fire, the further thrown,
Still with a greater blaze she shone,
And her bright soul broke out on ev'ry side.
Milton.
There can be no greater labour than to be always dissembling; there being so many ways by which a smothered truth is apt to blaze, and break out. South.
There are men of concealed fire, that doth not break out in the ordinary circumstances of life.
Addison.
A violent fever broke out in the place, which swept away great multitudes. Addison.

20. To break out. To have eruptions from the body, as pustules or sores.

21. To break out. To become dissolute.

He broke not out into his great excesses, while he was restrained by the councils and authority of Seneca. Dryden.

22. To break up. To cease; to intermit.

23. To break up. To dissolve itself.

These, and the like conceits, when men have cleared their understanding by the light of experience, will scatter and break up like mist. Bacon.
The speedy depredation of air upon watery moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in nothing more visible than the sudden discharge or vanishing of a little cloud of breath, or vapour, from glass, or any polished body; for the mistiness scattereth, and breaketh up suddenly. Bacon.
But ere he came near it, the pillar and cross of light brake up, and cast itself abroad, as it were, into a firmament of many stars. Bacon.
What we obtain by conversation, is oftentimes lost again, as soon as the company breaks up, or, at least, when the day vanishes. Watts.

24. To break up. To begin holidays; to be dismissed from business.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers, unyok'd, they took their course,
East, west, north, south: or, like a school broke up,
Each hurries tow'rds his home and sporting-place. Shakesp.

25. To break with. To part friendship with any.

There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports, the Volscians, with two several powers,

Are enter'd in the Roman territories.—
—Go see this rumourer whipt. It cannot be,
The Volscians dare break with us. Shakesp.

Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks, and trepans? Whosoever breaks with his friend upon such terms, has enough to warrant him in so doing, both before God and man. South.

Invent some apt pretence
To break with Bertram. Dryden.

26. It is to be observed of this extensive and perplexed verb, that in all its significations, whether active or neutral, it has some reference to its primitive meaning, by implying either detriment, suddenness, violence, or separation. It is used often with additional particles, up, out, in, off, forth, to modify its signification.

BREAK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. State of being broken; opening.

From the break of day until noon, the roaring of the cannon never ceased. Knolles.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air, and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath into the wind. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. Life.

No man has more contempt than I of breath,
But whence hast thou the pow'r to give me death?
Dryden.

3. The state or power of breathing freely; opposed to the condition in which a man is breathless and spent.

At other times he casts to sue the chace,
Of swift wild beasts, or run on foot a race,
T' enlarge his breath, large breath in arms most needful,
Or else, by wrestling, to wax strong and heedful.
Spenser.

What is your difference? speak——
—I am scarce in breath, my lord. Shak. K. Lear.

Spaniard, take breath, some respite I'll afford;
My cause is more advantage than your sword. Dry.

Our swords so wholly did the fates employ,
That they at length grew weary to destroy?
Refus'd the work we brought, and, out of breath,
Made sorrow and despair attend for death.
Dryden's Aureng.

4. Respite; pause; relaxation.

Give me some breath, some little pause, dear lord,
Before I positively speak. Shakesp. Richard III.

5. Breeze; moving air.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.
Addison's Cato.

6. A single act; an instant.

You menace me, and court me, in a breath;
Your Cupid looks as dreadfully as death. Dryd.

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change,
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse. Shak.
Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.
Shakesp.

The amorous bird of night
Sung sponsal, and bid haste the ev'ning star,
On his hill-top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.
Your ill-meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies. Milton.
When to my arms thou brought'st thy virgin love,
Fair angels sung our bridal hymn above. Dryden.
With all the pomp of woe, and sorrow's pride!
Oh early lost! oh fitter to be led
In chearful splendour to the bridal bed! Walsh.
For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,

BRI'DAL. n. s. The nuptial festival.

Nay, we must think men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observance always,
As fits the bridal. Shakesp. Othello.
Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,
The bridal of the earth and sky,
Sweet dews shall weep thy fall to-night;
For thou must die. Herbert.
In death's dark bow'rs our bridals we will keep,
And his cold hand
Shall draw the curtain when we go to sleep. Dryd.

BRIDE. n. s. [bryd, Saxon; bruder, in Runick, signifies a beautiful woman.] A woman new married.

Help me mine own love's praises to resound,
Ne let the fame of any be envy'd;
So Orpheus did for his own bride. Spenser.
The day approach'd, when fortune should decide
Th' important enterprize, and give the bride. Dryd.
These are tributes due from pious brides,
From a chaste matron, and a virtuous wife. Smith.

BRI'DEBED. n. s. [from bride and bed.] Marriage bed.

Now until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray;
To the best bridebed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be. Shakesp.
Would David's son, religious, just, and brave,
To the first bridebed of the world receive
A foreigner, a heathen, and a slave? Prior.

BRI'DECAKE. n. s. [from bride and cake.] A cake distributed to the guests at the wedding.

With the phant'sies of hey-troll,
Troll about the bridal bowl,
And divide the broad bridecake
Round about the bridestake. Ben Jonson.
The writer, resolved to try his fortune, fasted all day, and, that he might be sure of dreaming upon something at night, procured an handsome slice of bridecake, which he placed very conveniently under his pillow. Spectator

BRI'DEGROOM. n. s. [from bride and groom.] A new married man.

As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,
That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,
And summon him to marriage. Shakesp.
Why, happy bridegroom!
Why dost thou steal so soon away to bed? Dryden.

BRI'DEMEN. } n. s. The attendants
BRI'DEMAIDS. } on the bride and bridegroom.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Dissolve sheeps dung in water, and add to it as much salt as will make a strong brine; in this liquor steep your corn. Mortimer.

2. The sea, as it is salt.

All but mariners,
Plung'd in the foaming brine, did quit the vessel,
Then all afire with me. Shakesp. Tempest.

The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope, with all her sisters, play'd. Milton.

As, when two adverse winds
Engage with horrid shock, the ruffled brine
Roars stormy. Philips.

3. Tears, as they are salt.

What a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!
Shakesp.

BRI'NEPIT. n. s. [from brine and pit.] Pit of salt water.

Then I lov'd thee,
And shew'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
The fresh springs, brinepits, barren place, and fertile. Shakesp.

To BRING. v. a. [bpingan, Sax. preter. I brought; part. pass. brought; bpoht, Sax.]

1. To fetch from another place: distinguished from to carry, or convey, to another place.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again. Shak.

And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thy hand. Kings.

A registry of lands may furnish easy securities of money, that shall be brought over by strangers. Temple.

2. To convey in one's own hand; not to send by another.

And if my wish'd alliance please your king,
Tell him he should not send the peace, but bring.
Dryden.

3. To produce; to procure, as a cause.

There is nothing will bring you more honour, and more ease, than to do what right in justice you may. Bacon.

4. To reduce; to recal.

Bring back gently their wandering minds, by going before them in the train they should pursue, without any rebuke. Locke.

Nathan's fable had so good an effect, as to bring the man after God's own heart to a right sense of his guilt. Spectator.

5. To attract; to draw along.

In distillation, the water ascends difficultly, and brings over with it some part of the oil of vitriol.
Newton's Opticks

6. To put into any particular state or circumstances; to make liable to any thing.

Having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge, as they shall have occasion. Locke.

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

7. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally 'ring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Estrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge by insensible degrees. Locke

8. To recall; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

9. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, how, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness, that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would be no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could but be brought to delight in them.
Locke.

10. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about,
If all of you would join to help him out.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison's Freeholder.

11. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing. Shakesp.

More wonderful
Than that which, by creation, first brought forth
Light out of darkness! Paradise Lost.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
Among illustrious women, faithful wives.
Milton's Sampson Agonistes.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand;
Another queen brings forth another brand,
To burn with foreign fires her native land! Dryd.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice, and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

12. To bring forth. To bring to light.

The thing that is hid bringeth he forth to light.
Job, xxxviii. 11.

13. To bring in. To place in any condition.

He protests he loves you,
And needs no other suitor, but his liking,
To bring you in again. Shakesp. Othello.

14. To bring in. To reduce.

Send over into that realm such a strong power of men, as should perforce bring in all that rebellious rout, and loose people. Spenser on Ireland.

15. To bring in. To afford gain.

Trade brought us in plenty and riches. Locke.

16. To bring in. To introduce.

Entertain no long discourse with any; but, if you can, bring in something to season it with religion. Taylor.

There is but one God who made heaven and earth, and sea and winds; but the folly and madness of mankind brought in the images of gods.
Stilling fleet

The fruitfulness of Italy, and the like, are not brought in by force, but naturally rise out of the argument. Addison.

Since he could not have a seat among them himself, he would bring in one who had more merit. Tatler.

Quotations are best brought in to confirm some opinion controverted. Swift.

17. To bring off. To clear; to procure to be acquitted; to cause to escape.

I trusted to my head, that has betrayed me, and I found fault with my legs, that would otherwise have brought me off. L'Estrange.

Set a kite upon the bench, and it is forty to one he'll bring off a crow at the bar. L'Estrange.

The best way to avoid this imputation, and to bring off the credit of our understanding, is to be truly religious. Tillotson.

18. To bring on. To engage in action.

If there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on. Bacon.

19. To bring on. To produce as an occasional cause.

The fountains of the great deep being broke open, so as a general destruction and devastation was brought upon the earth, and all things in it. Burnet's Theory.

The great question, which in all ages has disturbed mankind, and brought on them those mischiefs. Locke.

20. To bring over. To convert; to draw to a new party.

This liberty should be made use of upon few occasions of small importance, and only with a view of bringing over his own side, another time, to something of greater and more publick moment. Swift's Church of England Man.

The protestant clergy will find it, perhaps, no difficult matter to bring great numbers over to the church. Swift.

21. To bring out. To exhibit; to shew.

If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Which he could bring out, where he had,
And what he boughtthem for, and paid. Hudibras.

These shake his soul, and, as they boldly press,
Bring out his crimes, and force him to confess. Dryden.

Another way made use of, to find the weight of the denarii, was by the weight of Greek coins; but those experiments bring out the denarius heaver. Arbuthnot.

22. To bring under. To subdue; to repress.

That sharp course which you have set down, for the bringing under of those rebels of Ulster, and preparing a way for their perpetual reformation. Spenser.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

23. To bring up. To educate; to instruct; to form.

The well bringing up of the people, serves as a most sure bond to hold them. Sidney.

He that takes upon him the charge of bringing up young men, especially young gentlemen, should have something more in him than Latin. Locke.

They frequently conversed with this lovely virgin, who had been brought up by her father in knowledge. Addison's Guardian.

24. To bring up. To introduce to general practice.

Several obliging deferences, condescensions, and submissions, with many outward forms and ceremonies, were first of all brought up among the politer part of mankind, who lived in courts and cities. Spectator.

25. To bring up. To cause to advance.

Bring up your army; but I think you'll find,
They've not prepar'd for us. Shakesp.

26. Bring retains, in all its senses, the idea of an agent, or cause, producing a real or metaphorical motion of something towards something; for it is oft said, that he brought his companion out. The meaning is, that he was brought to something that was likewise without.

BRI'NGER. n. s. [from bring.] The person that brings any thing.

Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office: and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd tolling a dead friend. Shakesp.

Best you see safe the bringer
Out of the host: I must attend mine office. Shak.

To hear and see her plaints, her brinish tears. Shakesp.

For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave;
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him. Shakesp.

BRI'NISHNESS. n. s. [from brinish.] Saltness; tendency to saltness.

BRINK. n. s. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place, as of a precipice or a river.

Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,
And from the precipice's brink retire,
Afraid to venture on so large a leap. Dryden.

We stand therefore on the brinks and confines of those states at the day of doom. Atterbury.

So have I seen, from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together;
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And, swimming, never wet a feather. Swift.

BRI'NY. adj. [from brine.] Salt.

He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart did hide;
Or his, at least, in hollow wood,
Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden.

Then, briny seas, and tasteful springs, farewel,
Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell. Addison.

A muriatick or briny taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt. Arbuthnot.

BRI'ONY. See BRYONY.

BRISK. adj. [brusque, French.]

1. Lively; vivacious; gay; sprightly; applied to men.

Pr'ythee, die, and set me free,
Or else be

Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance. Addison.

To BRU'TALIZE. v. a. To make brutal or savage.

BRU'TALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.

Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed. Arbuthnot.

BRUTE. adj. [brutus, Latin.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.

Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption. Bentley.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.

Even brute animals make use of this artificial way, of making divers motions to have several significations, to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten. Holder.

In the promulgation of the Mosaick law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart. South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.

Then to subdue, and quell through all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milt.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.

This acute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd
The joy of loving, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE. n. s. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage.

What may this mean? Language of man pronounc'd
By tongue of brute, and human sense expres'd! Milton.

To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced. Hale.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatick, or amphibious. All those animals which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatick are those, whose constant abode is upon the water. Locke.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate,
All but the page prescribed, their present state;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

To BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruit.] To report.

This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness. Knolles.

BRU'TENESS. n. s. [from brute.] Brutality; a word not now used.

Thou dotard vile,
That with thy bruteness shend'st thy comely age. Spenser.

To BRU'TIFY. v. a. [from brute.] To make a man a brute.

O thou fallacious woman! am I then brutified?
Ay; I feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I am ripe horn mad. Congreve.

BRU'TISH. adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd
Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others. Grew.

3. Gross; carnal.

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself. Shakesp.

After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene. South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilised.

They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God. Hooker.

BRU'TISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute; savagely; irrationally; grossly.

I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason. South.

BRU'TISHNESS. n. s. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

All other courage, besides that, is not true valour, but brutishness. Spratt.

BRY'ONY. n. s. [bryonia, Lat.] A plant.

BUB. n. s. [a cant word.] Strong malt liquor.

Or if it be his fate to meet
With folks who have more wealth than wit,
He loves cheap port, and double bub,
And settles in the humdrum club. Prior.

BU'BBLE. n. s. [bobbel, Dutch.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without: and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble is. Bacon.

The colours of bubbles, with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow. Newton.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the success of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret. Bacon.

Then a soldier,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakesp.

War, he sung, is toil and trouble,
Honour but an empty bubble,
Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.

The nation then too late will find,
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.

Cease, dearest mother, cease to chide;
Gany's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;
Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.

He has been my bubble these twenty years, and to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes. Arbuthnot.

To BU'BBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall. Shakesp.

Adder's fork, and blindworm's sting,
Lizard's leg and owlet's wing:
For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakesp.

Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears. Dryden.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat; at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat. Woodward.

2. To run with a gentle noise.

For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return. Dryden.

Not bubbling fountains to the thirsty swain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sunshine to the bee,
Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

To BU'BBLE. v. a. To cheat; a cant word.

He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drilled him on to five and fifty. Addison.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young beau better with a toy. Arbuthnot.

BU'BBLER. n. s. [from bubble.] A cheat.

What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers! Digby to Pope.

BU'BBY. n. s. A woman's breast.

Foh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel young fellow, so much governed by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby? Arbuthnot.

BU'BO. n. s. [Lat. from βουβὼν the groin.] That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called buboes. Quincy.

I suppurated it after the manner of a bubo, opened it, and endeavoured detersion. Wiseman.

BUBONOCE'LE. n. s. [Lat from βουβὼν the groin, and κήλη a rupture.] A particular kind of rupture, when the intestines break down into the groin. Quincy.

When the intestine, or omentum, falls through the rings of the abdominal muscles into the groin, it is called hernia inguinalis, or if into the scrotum, scrotalis: these two, though the first only is properly so called, are known by the name of bubonocele. Sharp.

BU'BUKLE. n. s. A red pimple.
His face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames of fire. Shakesp.

BUCK. n. s. [bauche, Germ. suds or lye.]
1. The liquor in which clothes are washed.
Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck: I warrant you, buck, and of the season too it shall appear. Shakesp.
2. The clothes washed in the liquor.
Of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. Shakesp.

BUCK. n. s. [bwch, Welsh; bock, Dutch; bouc, Fr.] The male of the fallow deer; the male of rabbits, and other animals.
Bucks, goats, and the like, are said to be tripping or saliant, that is, going or leaping. Peacham.

To* BUCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To wash clothes.
Here is a basket; he may creep in here, and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to bucking. Shakesp.

To* BUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To copulate, as bucks and does.
The chief time of setting traps, is in their bucking time. Mortimer.

BU'CKBASKET. n. s. The basket in which clothes are carried to the wash.
They conveyed me into a buckbasket; rammed me in with foul shirts, foul stockings, and greasy napkins. Shakesp.

BU'CKBEAN. n. s. [bocksboonen, Dutch.] A plant; a sort of trefoil.
The bitter nauseous plants, as centaury, buckbane, gentian, of which tea may be made, or wines by infusion. Floyer.

BU'CKET. n. s. [baquet, Fr.]
1. The vessel, in which water is drawn out of a well.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen, and full of water. Shak.
Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.
2. The vessels, in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.
Now streets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
To a less noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

BU'CKLE. n. s. [bwccl, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, Fr.]
1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch, made to fasten one thing to another.
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Shakesp.
The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder. Arbuth.
Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.
2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.
The greatest beau was dressed in a fierce periwig who wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Spectator.
That five-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. Pope.

To* BU'CKLE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a buckle.
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee. Shakesp.
France, whose armour conscience buckled on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field. Shak.
Thus ever, when I buckle on my helmet,
Thy fears afflict thee. Philips.
When you carry your master's riding coat, wrap your own in it, and buckle them up close with a strap. Swift.
2. To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.
The Saracen, this hearing, rose amain,
And catching up in haste his three square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buckled to the field. Spenser.
3. To join in battle.
The lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front. Hayward.
4. To confine.
How brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage!
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakesp.

To* BU'CKLE. v. n. [bucken, Germ.]
1. To bend; to bow.
The wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms. Shakesp.
2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See the active, 2d sense.
Now a covetous old crafty knave,
At dead of night, shall raise his son, and cry,
Turn out, you rogue, how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Dryden.
This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by laziness unbent, or by avocation bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.
3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter; to join in a close fight, like men locked or buckled together.
For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me. Shakespeare.
Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;
Is this an age to buckle with a bride? Dryden.

BU'CKLER. n. s. [bwccled, Welsh; bouclier, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.
He took my arms, and while I forc'd my way
Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;
My buckler o'er my aged father cast.
Still fighting, still defending, as I past Dryden
This medal compliments the emperor as the Romans did dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome. Addison.

To* BU'CKLER. v. a. [from the noun.] To support; to defend.
Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate;
I'll buckler thee against a million. Shakesp.

BUD. n. s. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.
Be as thou was wont to be,
See as thou wast wont to see:
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power. Shak.
Writers say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shakesp.
When you the flow'rs for Chloe twine,
Why do you to her garland join
The meanest bud that falls from mine? Prior.
Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.

To* BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To put forth young shoots, or gems.
Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field. Eccl.
2. To rise as a gem from the stalk.
There the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a conflux quickly budded out. Clarendon.
Heav'n gave him all at once, then snatch'd away,
Ere mortals all his beauties could survey;
Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryden.
Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,
And felt for budding horns on their smooth foreheads rear'd. Dryden's Silenus.
3. To be in the bloom, or growing.
Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,
Whither away, or where is thy abode? Shakesp.

Of apricocks, the largest is much improved by budding upon a peach stock. Temple.

To* BUDGE. v. n. [bouger, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place: a low word.
All your prisoners are
In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,
They cannot budge till your release. Shakesp.
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakesp.
I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge
For fear. Hudibras.

BUDGE. adj. [of uncertain etymology] Surly; stiff; formal.
O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the Stoick fur. Milton.

BUDGE. n. s. The dressed skin or fur of lamb. Dict.

BU'DGER. n. s. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.
Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after. Shakesp.

BU'DGET. n. s. [bogette, Fr.]
1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sowskin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it. Shakesp.

Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom, or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.

His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.

2. It is used for a store or stock.

It was nature in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.

BUFF. n. s. [from buffalo.]

1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.

A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

2. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.

3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.

A fiend, a fairy, pityless and rough,
A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakesp.

To BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.

There was a shock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From aught but a block. Ben Jonson.

BUFFALO. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become the unworthy browse
Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryd.

BUFFET. n. s. [buffeto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakesp.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Has ta'en with equal thanks. Shakesp.

Go baffled coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milt.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the son of Neptune, stunn'd
With these repeated buffets, quits the ground.
Dryden.

BUFFE'T. n. s. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope.

To BU'FFET. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness. Shakesp.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shakesp.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shakesp.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine.
Otway.

To BU'FFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakesp. Henry V.

BUFFO'ON. n. s. [buffon, Fr.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antick postures; a jack-pudding.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.

It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.

The bold buffoon, where'er they tread the green,
Their mother mimicks, but with jest obscene.
Garth.

BU'FFOONERY. n. s. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffoonery. Locke.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffoonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts, let buffoonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need.
Dryden.

BUG. n. s. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passage, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings.
Pope.

BUG. } n. s. [It is derived by
BU'GBEAR. } some from big, by others from pug; bug, in Welsh, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen: generally now used for a false terrour to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear,
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.
Fairy Queen.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek.
Shakesp.

Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him. Shakesp.

We have a horrour for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us. L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BU'GGINESS. n. s. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BU'GGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BU'GLE. } n. s. [from bugen, Sax.
BU'GLEHORN. } to bend, Skinner; from bucula, Lat. a heifer, Junius; from bugle, the bonasus, Lye.] A hunting horn.

Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay. Fairy Queen.

I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick. Shakesp.

He gave his bugle horn a blast,
That through the woodland echo'd far and wide.
Tickell.

BU'GLE. n. s. A shining bead of black glass.

Bugle bracelets, necklace amber,
Perfum'd for a lady's chamber. Shakesp.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shak.

BU'GLE. n. s. [from bugula, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BU'GLE. n. s. A sort of wild ox.
Phillips's World of Words.

To BUILD. v. a. preter. I built, I have built, [bilden, Dutch.]

1. To raise from the ground; to make a fabrick, or an edifice.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name. Chronicles.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build. Shakesp.

2. To raise in any laboured form.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dress, appeared like a Colossus upon putting it on. Spectator.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities Don.

I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.

To BU'ILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend. Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it. Hooker.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon soundness of their own proceedings. Bacon.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loss of their expectations. Dryden.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think. Addison.

BU'ILDER. n. s. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
They found, he felt, they had no lease of bliss.
Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away. Hooker.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
T'invite the builder, and his choice prevent.
Denham.

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame.
Prior.

BU'ILDING. n. s. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakesp.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands:
That fabrick rises high as heav'n,
Whose basis on devotion stands. Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings or statues that are still extant. Addison.

BU'ILT. n. s. [from build.

1. The form; the structure;

As in the bulk, so different is the fight;
Their mountain shot is on our sails design'd;
Lodg'd in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.
Dryden.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built. Temple.

BULB. n. s. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalendar.

If we consider the bulb or ball of the eye, the exteriour membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it. Ray.

BU'LBACEOUS. adj. [bulbaceus, Lat.] The same with bulbous. Dict.

BU'LBOUS. adj. [from bulb.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and spreading roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap ascendeth most to the air and sun. Bacon.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Tulips, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle bend inward, or come again close to the stalk. Raym the Creation

To BULGE. v. n. [It was originally written bilge: bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bilg, Sax. a bladder.]

1. To take in water; to founder.

Thrice round the ship was tost,
Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost.
Dryden.

2. To jut out.

The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

BU'LIMY. n. s. [βυλιμία, from βοῦς an ox, and λιμὸς hunger.] An enormous appetite, attended with fainting and coldness of the extremities. Dict.

BULK. n. s. [bulce Dutch, the breast or largest part of a man.]

1. Magnitude of material substance; mass.

Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon's War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk; but fitter for the merchant than the man of war, for burden than for battle. Raleigh.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life. Arbuthnot.

2. Size; quantity.

Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind as they subsist in themselves, and by their own natural bulk pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.

Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison's Freeholder.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually. Swift.

4. Main fabrick.

He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. Shakesp.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo.

BULK. n. s. [from bielcke, Dan. a beam.] A part of a building jutting out.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come:
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home.
Shakesp.

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulk, and brought out the rope to the company.
Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

BU'LKHEAD. n. s. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

BU'LKINESS. n. s. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

Wheat, or any other grain, cannot serve instead of money, because of its bulkiness, and change of its quantity. Locke.

BU'LKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Latreus, the bulkiest of the double race,
Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Halesus grace.
Dryden.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes bulky rage,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage.
Arbuthnot.

BULL. n. s. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, Sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shakesp.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon

Best age to go to bull, or calve, we hold,
Begins at four, and ends at ten years old. May.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round. Psalms.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson.

4. A letter published by the pope.

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bullæ; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bullæ came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulls. Arbuth.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Atterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope's Letters.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as bull-head, bulrush, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. s. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison.

BULL-BEEF. n. s. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves. Shakesp.

BULL-BEGGAR. n. s. [This word probably came from the insolence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Ayliffe.

BULL-CALF. n. s. [from bull and calf.] A he-calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly and roar'd for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakesp.

BULL-DOG. n. s. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison.

BULL-FINCH. n. s. [rubicilla.] A small bird that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth. Phillip's World of Words.

The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake,
The mellow bull-finch answers from the grove
Thomson

BULL-FLY. } n. s. An insect.
BULL-BEE. }
Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-HEAD. n. s. [from bull and head.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. The name of a fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of the tail is round Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dog. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows. Walton.

3. A little black water vermin.
Phillips's World of Words.

BULL-TROUT. n. s. A large kind of trout.

There is in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts. Walton.

BULL-WEED. n. s. The same with knap-weed.

BULL-WORT, or BISHOP'S-WEED. n. s. [ammi, Lat.] A plant.

BULLACE. n. s. A wild sour plum.

In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to make them late; tulyoaks, and such like. Bacon.

BULLET. n. s. [boulte, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine, wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ramm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill.
Spenser.

Glaffer, their leader, despeately fighting amongst the foremost of the janisaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knolles.

And as the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.
Dryden.

BU'LLION. n. s. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.

A second multitude,
With wond'rous art, found out the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross.
Milton.

— Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison

BULLI'TION. n. s. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bulliton, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

BU'LLOCK. n. s. [from bull.] A young bull.

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakesp

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns
Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Cowley

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple

BU'LLY. n. s. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man, that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter!—What says my bully rock? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakesp

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange.

'Tis so ridic'lous, but so true withal,
A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden.

A scolding here is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows cholerick, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison.

To BU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King.

To BU'LLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

BU'LRUSH. n. s. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty; confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd;
The knotty bulrush next in order stood,
And all within of reeds, a trembling wood. Dryd.

BU'LWARK. n. s. [bolwerke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him the squire made quickly to retrust,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser.

They oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enter'd to toil. Addis.

2. A fortification.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation. Addison.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakesp.

To BU'LWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison.

BUM. n. s. [bomme, Dutch.] The buttocks; the part on which we sit.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale,
Sometime for three-foot stool mistaketh me,
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shak.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight,
And set him on his bum upright. Hudibras.

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies and reliefs of the bum. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's soar'd too high. W———n.

BUMBA'ILIFF. n. s. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronounced by gradual corruption boun, bun, bum bailiff.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, Sir Andrew, scout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakesp.

BU'MBARD. n. s. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a black jack; a leathern pitcher.

Yond same black cloud, yond huge one looks Like a foul bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakesp.

BU'MBAST. n. s. [falsely written for bombast; bombast and bombasine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom a tree, and sein silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Steevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bumbast of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing; wadding.

We have receiv'd your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy,
As bumbast, and as lining to the time. Shakesp.

BUMP. n. s. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakesp.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryd.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombio, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head,
And as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said——— Dryden.

BU'MPER. n. s. [from bumper.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brim.

Places his delight
All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juvenal.

BU'MPKIN. n. s. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump: may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead?] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never known of such delights before, blessed herself at the strangeness of her condition. L'Estrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air.
Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears;
The country bumpkin the same livery wears. Dryd.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleased. Locke.

BU'MPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH. n. s. [buncker, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them. Isaiah, xxx. 6.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard, with little round balls or bunches, like hard boil'd eggs. Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clust'ring bunches growing. Shak.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryd.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryd.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fa. Q.

All I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of raddish. Shakesp.

Ancient Janus, with his double face
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place. Dryd.

The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children. Locke.

4. Any thing bound into a knot: as, a bunch of ribbon; a tuft.

Upon the top of all his lofty crest,
A bunch of hairs discover'd diversly,
With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly drest.
Spenser.

To BUNCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out in a bunch; to grow out in protuberances.

It has the resemblance of a champignon before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob at one end. Woodward.

BU'NCH-BA'CKED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back; crookbacked.

The days shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To help thee curse this poi'sonous bunch-back'd toad.
Shakesp.

BU'NCHINESS. n. s. [from bunchy.] The quality of being bunchy, or growing in bunches.

BU'NCHY. adj. [from bunch.] Growing in bunches; having tufts.

He is more especially distinguished from other birds, by his bunchy tail and the shortness of his legs. Grew.

BU'NDLE. n. s. [bynble, Sax. from bynb.]

1. A number of things bound together.

As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. Hale.

Try lads, can you this bundle break;—
Then bids the youngest of the six
Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overloaden, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle Spectator.

To BU'NDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together; with up.

We ought to put things together as well as we can, doctrinæ causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frize;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n. s. [bing, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung, stick, or plug. Mortimer.

To BUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

BU'NGHOLE. n. s. [from bung and hole.] The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterwards stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noblest dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole? Shakesp.

To BU'NGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryd.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands Swift.

To BU'NGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly: with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms, being fetcht
From glist'ring semblances of piety. Shakesp.

They make lame mischief, though they mean it well:
Their int'rest is not finely drawn, and hid,
But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen. Dry.

BU'NGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errours and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray on the Crea.

BU'NGLER. n. s. [bungler, Welsh; q. bún y glêr, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters, at the first, were such bunglers, and ignorant, that, when they drew a cow, or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peacham on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty shews a master's hand.
Dryden.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split.
Swift.

BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar functions. Bentley.

BUNN. n. s. [bunelo, Span.] A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear,
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or bunns and sugar to the damsel's tooth.
Gay's Pastorals.

BUNT. n. s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent.] A swelling part; an increasing cavity.

The wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt, or cod, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze. Carew.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out: as, the sail bunts out.

BU'NTER. n. s. A cant word for a woman who picks up rags about the street; and used by way of contempt, for any low vulgar woman.

BU'NTING n. s. [emberiza alba.] The name of a bird.

I took this lark for a bunting. Shakesp.

BU'NTING. n. s. The stuff of which a ship's colours are made.

BUOY. n. s. [bouë, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice: and yond tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shakesp. King Lear.

Like buoys that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod.
Pope's Dunciad.

To BUOY. v. a. [from the noun. The u is mute in both.] To keep afloat; to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant. King Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyss, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

BUO'YANCY. n. s. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it. Derham's Physico-Theology.

BUO'YANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating; light; that which will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swom with the tide, and the water upon me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit now no more
Inspire the course. Thomson's Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR, come from the Sax. bun, an inner chamber, or place of shade and retirement. Gibson's Camden.

BUR. n. s. [lappa: bourre, Fr. is down; the bur being filled with a soft tomentum, or down.] A rough head of a plant, called a burdock, which sticks to the hair or clothes.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckxies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakesp. Hen. V.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, let loose;
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent. Shak.

Dependents and suitors are always the burs, and sometimes the briers, of favourites. Wotton.

Whither betake her
From the chill dew, amongst rude burs and thistles. Milton.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burs and thorns disgrace the ground.
Dryden.

A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no shaking him off. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

BU'RBOT. n. s. A fish full of prickles. Dict.

BU'RDELAIS. n. s. A sort of grape.

BU'RDEN. n. s. [byrðen, Sax. and therefore properly written burthen. It is supposed to come from burdo, Lat. a mule.]

1. A load; something to be carried.

Camels have their provender
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them. Shakesp. Coriolanus

It is of use in lading of ships, and may help to shew what burden, in the several kinds, they will bear. Bacon's Physical Remains

2. Something grievous or wearisome,

Couldst thou support
That burden, heavier than the earth to bear? Milt.

None of the things that are to learn, should ever be made a burden to them, or imposed on them as a task. Locke.

Deaf, giddy, helpless, left alone,
To all my friends a burden grown. Swift.

3. A birth: now obsolete.

Thou hadst a wife once, call'd Æmilia.

Spectator.

BUT. conjunct. [bute, butan, Saxon.]

1. Except.

An emission of immateriate virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious: but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.
Who can it be, ye gods! but perjur'd Lycon?
Who can inspire such storms of rage, but Lycon?
Where has my sword left one so black, but Lycon?
Smith.
Your poem hath been printed, and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages, by our ignorance in facts and persons. Swift.

2. Except that; unless; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 11.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters measur'd. Shakesp.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets, and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon.
Our wants are many, and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity.
Bramhall against Hobbes.
God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world; therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts's Logick.

5. Only; nothing more than.

If my offence be of such mortal kind,
That not my service past, or present sorrows,
Can ransom me into his love again;
But to know so, must be my benefit. Shakesp.
What nymph so rare, his voice but hears,
Will be my rival, though she have but ears.
Ben Jonson.
No, Aurengzebe, you merit all my heart,
And I'm too noble but to give a part. Dryden.

Bid but men consider the true notion of God, he would appear to be full of goodness. Tillotson.
If we do but put virtue and vice in equal circumstances, the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of religion. Tillotson.
The mischiefs or harms that come by play, inadvertency, or ignorance, are not at all, or but very gently, to be taken notice of. Locke on Education.
If a reader examines Horaces Art of Poetry, he will find but very few precepts in it, which he may not meet with in Aristotle. Addison.
Prepar'd I stand: he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope.

6. Than.

The full moon was no sooner up and shining in all its brightness, but he opened the gate of Paradise. Guardian.

7. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground
Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryd.

8. Otherwise than that.

It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways.
Hooker.
Who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shak.

9. Not more than; even.

A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr. Cowley's, was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.
Beroe but now I left; whom, pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain.
Dryden.
It is evident, in the instance I gave but now, the consciousness went along. Locke.

10. By any other means than.

Out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny: whose qualifications shall come into no true taste again, but by transplanting of Cassio. Shak.

11. If it were not for this; that; if it were not that. Obsolete.

Believe me, I'd rather have lost my purse
Full of Crusades. And but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking. Shakesp.
I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee. Shakesp.

12 However; howbeit; a word of indeterminate connexon.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame;
But, to pursue the end for which I came,
Unite your subjects first, then let us go
And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryd.

13. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and signifies the same with that. It sometimes is joined with that.

They made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon.
I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have wasted itself. Dryden.
There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison.

14. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore impossible but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair criticks. Dryden.

15. Otherwise than. Obsolete.

I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother. Shakesp.

16. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained; only.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends;
A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

17. A particle of objection; yet it may be objected: it has sometimes yet with it.

But yet, Madam——
I do not like but yet; it does allay

The good precedence; fie upon but yet!
But yet is as a jaylour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakesp.
Must the heart then have been formed and constituted before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley.

18. But for; without; had not this been.
Rash man, forbear! but for some unbelief,
My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Waller.
Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was tied above. Dryden.
When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,
And, but for mischief, you had died for spite.
Dryden.

BUT. n. s. [bout, Fr.] A boundary.
But, if I ask you what I mean by that word, you will answer, I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not, a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word. Holder.

BUT. n. s. [In sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water. Harris.

BUT-END. n. s. [from but and end.] The blunt end of any thing; the end upon which it rests.

Thy weapon was a good one when I wielded it, but the but-end remains in my hands. Arbuthnot.
Some of the soldiers accordingly pushed them forwards, with the but-ends of their pikes, into my reach. Swift.

BU'TCHER. n. s [boucher, Fr.]
1. One that kills animals to sell their flesh.
The shepherd and the butcher both may look upon one sheep with pleasing conceits. Sidney.
Hence he learnt the butcher's guile,
How to cut your throat and smile;
Like a butcher, doom'd for life,
In his mouth to wear his knife. Swift.
2. One that is delighted with blood.
Honour and renown are bestowed on conquerors, who, for the most part, are but the great butchers of mankind. Locke.

To BU'TCHER. v. a. [from the noun] To kill; to murder.
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shew'st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee. Shak.
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully by you my hopes are butcher'd.
Shakesp.
The poison and the dagger are at hand to butcher a hero, when the poet wants brains to save him. Dryden.

BU'TCHERS-BROOM, or KNEEHOLLY. n. s. [ruscus, Lat.]

Hence we may understand, to add that upon the by, that it is not necessary. Boyle.

So, while my lov'd revenge is full and high,
I'll give you back your kingdom by the by.
Dryden.

By. In composition, implies something out of the direct way, and consequently some obscurity, as a by-road; something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

By-coffeehouse. n. s. A coffee-house in an obscure place.

I afterwards entered a by-coffi chouse, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror. Addison.

By-concernment. n.s. An affair which is not the main business.

Our plays, besides the main design, have underplots, or by-concernments, or less considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot. Dryden.

By dependence. n.s. An appendage; something accidentally depending on another.

These,
And your three motives to the battle, with
I know not how much more, should be demanded;
And all the other by-dependences,
From chance to chance. Shakesp.

By-design. n.s. An incidental purpose.

And if she miss the mouse-trap lines,
They'll serve for other by-designs,
And make an artist understand
To copy out her seal or hand;
Or find void places in the paper,
To steal in something to entrap her. Hudibras.

By-end. n. s. Private interest; secret advantage.

All people that worship for fear, profit, or some other by-end, fall within the intendment of this fable. L'Estrange.

No by-views of his own shall mislead him. Atterbury.

By-walk. n. s. A private walk; not the main road.

He moves afterwards in by-walks, or underplots, as diversions to the main design, lest it should grow tedious; though they are still naturally joined. Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble; but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and refreshment. Broome.

By-way. n. s. A private and obscure way.

Night stealths are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind fords, unused of any but such like. Spenser on Ireland

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread.
Spenser

Wholly abstain or wed: thy bounteous Lord
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-ways,
But gladly welcome what he doth afford;
Not grudging that thy lust hath bounds and stays. Herbert.

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in want, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption. Bacon.

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it. Addison.

By-west. adv. Westward; to the west of.

Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwelt by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow. Davies on Ireland.

And cabin in a cave. Shakesp.

To Ca'bin. v. a. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'scap'd; I had else been perfect,
As broad and general as the casing air;
But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
To saucy doubts and fear. Shakesp.

Ca'binED. adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

CABINET. n. s. [cabinet. Fr.]

1. A closet; a small room.

At both corners of the farther side, let there be two delicate or rich cabinets, daintily paved, richly hanged, glazed with crystalline glass, and a rich cupola in the midst, and all other elegancy that may be thought on. Bacon.

2. A hut or small house.

Hearken awhile in the green cabinet,
The laurel song of careful Colinet. Spenser.

3. A private room in which consultations are held.

You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practised in the camp. Dryden.

4. A set of boxes or drawers for curiosities; a private box.

Who sees a soul in such a body set,
Might love the treasure for the cabinet. Ben Jonson
In vain the workman shew'd his wit,
With rings and hinges counterfeit,
To make it seem, in this disguise,
A cabinet to vulgar eyes. Swift.

5. Any place in which things of value are hidden.

Thy breast hath ever been the cabinet,
Where I have lock'd my secrets. Denham.
We cannot discourse of the secret, but by describing our duty; but so much duty must needs open a cabinet of mysteries. Taylor.

CA'BINET-COUNCIL. n. s.

1. A council held in a private manner, with unusual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in some kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon.

2. A select number of privy counsellors supposed to be particularly trusted.

From the highest to the lowest it is universally read; from the cabinet-council to the nursery. Gay to Swift

CA'BINET-MAKER. n. s. [from cabinet and make.] One that makes small nice drawers or boxes.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs; so that they would be of great use for the cabinet-makers, as well as the turners, and others Mortimer.

CA'BLE. n. s. [cabl, Welsh; cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ship to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still. Shakesp.
The length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it; and nothing breaks that is not stretched. Raleigh
The cables crack; the sailors fearful cries
Ascend; and sable night involves the skies. Dryd.

CA'BURNS. n. s. Small ropes used in ships. Dict.

CA'COA. See CHOCOLATE NUT.

CACHE'CTICAL. } adj. [from cachexy.]
CACHE'CTICK. } Having an ill habit of body; shewing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than vapid and cachectical. Arbuthnot on Air.
The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, of some persons who are cachectic. Floyer.

CACHE'XY. n. s. [καχεξία] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms: most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions; proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the non-naturals, and often from severe and acute distempers. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CACHINNA'TION. n. s. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. Dict.

CA'CKEREL. n. s. A fish, said to make those who eat it laxative.

To CA'CKLE. v. n. [kaeckelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a noise as a goose.

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakesp.
Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories,
And save the state, by cackling to the tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.

The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
This woeful cackling cry with horrour heard
Of those distracted damsels in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.

Nic grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself, and fell a frisking and dancing about the room. Arbuthnot.

CA'CKLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a goose or fowl.

The silver goose before the shining gate
There flew, and by her cackle sav'd the state. Dryd.

2. A teltale: a tatler.

CACOCHY'MICAL. } adj. [from cacochy-
CACOCHY'MICK. } my.] Having the humours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative. Harvey on Consumptions.
If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wiseman.
The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, choler, melancholy, and phlegm; and this is to be explained by an effervescence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Floyer on the Humours.

CACOCHY'MY. n. s. [καχοχυμία] A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymy. Spots and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an orgasmus. Harvey.

CACO'PHONY. n. s. [κακοφωνία] A bad sound of words.

These things shall lie by, till you come to carp at them, and alter rhimes, grammar, triplets, and cacophonies of all kinds. Pope to Swift.

CADA'VEROUS. adj. [cadaver, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcass; having the qualities of a dead carcass.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, foetid, cadaverous, and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical persons. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CA'DDIS. n. s. [This word is used in Erse for the variegated clothes of the Highlanders.]

1. A kind of tape or ribbon.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddises, cambricks, lawns; why, he sings them over as if they were gods and goddesses. Shakesp.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw.

He loves the mayfly, which is bred of the codworm, or caddis; and these make the trout bold and lusty. Walton's Angler.

CADE. adj. It is deduced, by Skinner, from cadeler, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly.] Tame; soft; delicate; as, a cade lamb, a lamb bred at home.

To CADE. v. a. [from the noun.] To breed up in softness.

CADE. n. s. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father.—Or rather of stealing a cade of herrings. Shakesp.
Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close press'd husks is freed, thou must refrain
Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to broach
Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cades. Philips

CADE-WORM. n. s. The same with caddis.

CA'DENCE. }
CA'DENCY. } n. s. [cadence. Fr.]

Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
To fan the earth, now waked. Milton.

2. The fall of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetorick, which they call præter expectatum; for there is pleasure even in being deceived, Bacon.
There be words not made with lungs,
Sententious show'rs! O let them fall!
Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatick and epick poetry. Dryden.
The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain
The sound of blust'ring winds, which all night long
Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatched. Milton.
He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

5. In horsemanship.

Cadence is an equal measure or proportion which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed. Farrier's Dict.

CA'DENT. adj. [cadens, Lat.] Falling down.

CADE'T. n. s. [cadet, Fr. pronounced cadé.]

CAGE. n. s. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An inclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.
He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure you are not a prisoner. Shakesp.
Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd.
Waller.
And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds in silver cages hung;
And ev'ry fragant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.
A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment; a beast, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept.
Watts on the Mind.
The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beasts, inclosed with pallisadoes.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cage.

2. A wooden case in which the piers of bridges are built within the water.

CAI'TIFF. n. s. [cattivo, Ital. a slave; whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

Ἡμισυ τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀποάνυλας ἄλλοιν ἦμαρ. Homer.

A slave and a scoundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave; it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile caitiff! vassal of dread and despair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air!
Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Spenser.
'Tis not impossible
But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
As Angelo. Shakesp.
The wretched caitiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his story to himself. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. s. [cuch, Teutonick,]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christenings? do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? Shakesp.
My cake is dough, but I'll in amongst the rest.
Out of hope of all but my share of the feast. Shak.
The dismal day was come; the priests prepare
Their leaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair.
Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large, and of a chesnut colour, and hard and pithy. Bacon's Nat. Hist

3. Concreted matter; coagulated matter.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,
And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood. Dryden.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault, that lies underneath it, Addison on Italy
This is that very mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs. Shak.
He rins'd the wound,
And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,
That cak'd within. Addison.

CALABA'SH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf; divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instrumeuts of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMA'NCO. n. s. [A word derived, probably by some accident, from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, flung open to shew a calamanco waistcoat. Tatler.

CA'LAMINE. or Lapis Calaminaris, n. s. A kind of fossile bituminous earth, which, being mixed with copper, changes it into brass.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz. loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, lime-stones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Locke.

CA'LAMINT. n. s. [calamintha Lat.] The name of a plant.

CALA'MITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy; wretched; applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous; the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, when compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful: applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague. Harvey on Consumptions
Strict necessity
Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
Lest on my head both sin and punishment,
However insupportable, be all
Devolv'd. Milton.
Much rather I shall chuse
To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
And be in that calamitous prison left. Milton.
In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressour would have even revived them. South.

CALA'MITOUSNESS, n. s. [from calamitous.] Misery; distress.

CALA'MITY. n. s. [calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; insomuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamous, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

2. Misery; distress.

This infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and houshold peace confound.
Milton.
From adverse shores in safety let her hear
Foreign calamity, and distant war;
Of which great heav'n, let her no portion bear.
Prior.

CALA'MUS. n. s. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. The sweet reeds have no smell when they are green,—but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Calmet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus, xxx. 23.

CALA'SH. n. s. [from caleche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to flash
The vig'rous steeds, that drew his lord's calash.
King.

Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple.
Woodward on Fossils.

To CALCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurateth, then maketh fragile, and lastly it doth calcinate. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CALCINA'TION. n. s. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtile particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers residences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without calcination, or reducing it by art into a subtile powder. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CALCI'NATORY. n. s. [from calcinate.] A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCI'NE. v. a. [calciner, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To burn up.

Fiery disputes that union have calcin'd,
Almost as many minds as men we find. Denham.

To CALCI'NE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This chrystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newton's Opticks.

To CA'LCULATE. v. a. [calculer, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calculates his expences.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth
And told me, that by water I should die.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate,
Why all those things change from their ordinance?
Shakesp.

Who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.

The reasonableness of religion clearly appears, as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

To CA'LCULATE. v. n. To make a computation.

CALCULA'TION. n. s. [from calculate.]

CA'LCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.]
CA'LCULOUS. } Stony; gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculose concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulg. Err.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculous person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Sharp.

CA'LCULOUS. n. s. [Latin.] The stone in the bladder.

CA'LDRON. n. s. [chauldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; a boiler; a kettle.

In the midst of all
There placed was a caldron wide and tall,
Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Fairy Q.

Some strip the skin; some portion out the spoil;
The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;
Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil.
Dryden's Æncid.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain. Addison.

CALECHE. The same with CALASH.

CALEFA'CTION. n. s. [from calefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.

2. The state of being heated.

To CA'LEFY. v. n. [calefio, Lat.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To CA'LEFY. v. n. To make hot.

CA'LENDAR. n. s. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and stated times, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserved? what hath it done,
That it in golden letter should be set
Among the high tides, in the calendar?
Shakesp. King John.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other. Brown.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;
Let it be blotted from the calendar,
Lest it pollute the month! Dryden's Fables.

To CA'LENDER. v. a. [calendrer, Fr. Skinner.] To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CA'LENDER. n. s. [from the verb.] A hot press; a press in which clothiers smooth their cloth.

CA'LENTURE n. s. [from calco, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it. Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be cast into a calenture. Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,
The mariner with rapture sees,
On the smooth ocean's azure bed,
Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees;
With eager haste he longs to rove
In that fantastic scene, and thinks
It must be some enchanted grove;
And in he leaps, and down he sinks. Swift.

CALF. n. s. calves in the plural. [cealf, Saxon; kalf Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Nat. History.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Wilkins.

Ah, Blouzelind! I love thee more by half
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmet.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea, xiv. 2.

3. By way of contempt and reproach, applied to a human being; a dolt; a stupid wretch.

When a child haps to be got,
That after proves an ideot;
When folk perceive it thriveth not,
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half
Says, that the fairy left the oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton's Nymphid.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calf into a gouty small. Suckling.

CA'LIX. n. s. [Lat.] A cup, a word used in botany; as, the calix of a flower.

To CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopped; or from cæle, Sax. the keel. Skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great errour committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky. Raleigh's Essays.

So here some pick out bullets from the side;
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the calking iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryd.

CA'LKER. n. s. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wisemen thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Ezek. xxvii. 9.

CA'LKING. n. s. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall. Chambers.

To CALL. v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish]

1. To name, to denominate.

And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. Genesis, i. 5.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person. It is often used with local particles, as up, down, in, out, off.

Be not amazed; call all your senses to you; defend my reputation, or bid farewel to your good life for ever. Shakesp.

Why came not the slave back to me when I call'd him? Shakesp. King Lear.

[illegible] call'd forth from out a world of men,
To slay the innocent? Shakesp. Rich. III.

Or call up him that left half told
The story of Cambuscan bold. Milton.

Drunkenness calls off the watchmen from their tower; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue. Taylor's Holy Living.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of.
Duppa's Rules to Devotion.

Such fine employments our whole days divide;
The salutations of the morning tide.
Call up the sun; those ended, to the hall
We wait the patron, hear the lawyers bawl. Dryden

Then by consent abstain from further toils,
Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils.
Addison.

By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy, I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addison's Spectator.

Why dost thou call my sorrow up afresh?
My father's name brings tears into my eyes.
Addison's Cato.

I am called off from public dissertations, by a domestic affair of great importance. Tatler.

4. To summon judicially.

The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his miscarriages. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained. Watts.

5. To summon by command.

In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiah, xxii. 12.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety, or to summons into the church.

Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God.
Rom. i. 1.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.

I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth.
2 Cor. i. 23.

8. To appeal to.

When that lord perplexed their counsels and designs with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

9. To proclaim; to publish.

Nor ballad-singer, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud,
Nor parish clerk, who calls the psalm so clear. Gay

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.

He swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all his spots on every side. Cowley.

See Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line. Pope.

11. To stigmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deafness unqualifies men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.

He also is wise, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers; and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiah, xxxi. 2.

13. To call for. To demand; to require; to claim.

Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord.
Shakesp.

You see how men of merit are sought after; the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called for. Shakesp.

Among them he a spirit of phrensy sent,
Who hurt their minds,
And urg'd you on, with mad desire,
To call in haste for their destroyer.
Milton's Samson Agonistes.

For master, or for servant here to call,
Was all alike, where only two were all.
Dryden's Fables.

He commits every sin that his appetite calls for, or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear.
Rogers.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest

Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? why, in a very few days after, he put it out again.
Addison's Spectator.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.

If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, after they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.

[illegible] follow no farther now;
The heat is past, good cousin Westmoreland.
Call in the pow'rs, [illegible]

When their sov'reign's quarrel calls [illegible]'em out
His foes to mortal combat they defy. [illegible]len's Virgil.
Dryden.

To CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying.

This meaning probably arose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but the metaphor made is forgotten, and the expression is barbarous by in.

2. To make a short visit.

And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus, [illegible] to me.
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come [illegible]onson.
Ben Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a week, which she did for some time after, when he [illegible]heard no more of her. Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's. Spectator.
Addison's Spectator.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.

I would be loth to pay him before his [illegible]day, what need I be so forward with him, that [illegible]calls not on me? Shakesp. Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly.

Thrice call upon my name; thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and, calling thrice on their name, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument to their memories. Broome on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.

Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.
Psalm i. 15.

CALL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons or invitation

But death comes not at call, justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace for pray'rs or cries.
Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wond'ring forest soon should dance again:
The moving mountains hear the pow'rful call,
And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall.
Pope.

2. A requisition authoritative and public.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence, of a number of mean persons. Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,
Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,
May bring them back repentant and sincere. Milt.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,
Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call!
Roscommon.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,
Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryden.

St Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Locke.

5. Authority; command.

Oh, Sir! I wish he were within my call or yours. Denham.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever. Addison's Spect.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented.
Wilkins's Mathematical Magic.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now through the land his cure of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd:
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call,
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all.
Dryden.

9. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the sergeants feast at Ely-place, there being nine serjeants of that call. Bacon.

CA'LLAT. } n. s. A trull.
CA'LLET. }

He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.
Shakesp.

CA'LLING. n. s. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superior must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as Christianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of continence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence, to make your calling and election sure. 2 Peter, i. 10.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles. Hakewill on Providence.

CA'LLIPERS. n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology; nor does any thing more probably occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, inclosed, or embraced.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body; so that when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

CALLO'SITY. n. s. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin by hard labour; and therefore when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses; or as they harden, and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquors are useful, in the last hurtful. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CA'LLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated: hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wiseman.

2. Hardened; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous. L'Estrange.

The wretch is drench'd too deep;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep:
Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross,
He sins, and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

CA'LLOUSNESS. n. s. [from callous.

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftener we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul. Bentley.

CA'LLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclosed
Their callow young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who with pious care
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now silent airy does repair,
And finds her callow infants forc'd away. Dryden.

How in small flights they know to try their young,
And teach the callow child her parent's song.
Prior.

CA'LLUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme. Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous: applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and through the trembling air
Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair.
Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us. Jonah.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the silver-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. s.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence
Raleigh.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denham.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind.
Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards. since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy, in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus.
Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms, within our breasts
Decay of Piety.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,
The sacred rites and hetacombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CA'LMER. n. s. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CA'LMLY. adj. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows.
Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CA'LMNESS. n. s. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood.
Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all's in anger. Shakesp.

I beg the [illegible],
You would lay by those terrours of your face;
Till calmness to your eyes you first restore;
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CA'LMY. adj. [from calm.] Calm! peaceful. Not used.

And now they nigh approached to the sted,
Where as those mermaides dwelt: it was a still
And calmy bay, on one side sheltered
With the broad shadow of an hoary hill. Fairy Q.

CA'LOMEL. n. s. [calomelas, a chymical word.] Mercury six times sublimed.

He repeated lenient purgatives, with calomel, once in three or four days. Wiseman's Surgery.

CALORI'FICK. adj. [calorificus, Lat.] That which has the quality of producing heat; heating.

A calorifick principle is either excited within the heated body, or transferred to it, through any medium, for some other. Silver will grow hotter than the liquor it contains. Grew.

CALOTTE. n. s. [French.]

1. A cap or coif, worn as an ecclesiastical ornament in France.
2. [In architecture.] A round cavity or depressure, in form of a cap or cup, lathed and plaistered, used to diminish the rise or elevation of a chapel, cabinet, alcove, &c. Harris.

Madden on Boulter.

CA'LTROPS. n. s. [coltpæppe, Saxon.]

1. An instrument made with three spikes, so that which way soever it falls to the ground, one of them points upright, to wound horses feet.

The ground about was thick sown with caltrops, which very much incommoded the shoeless Moors.
Dr. Addison's Account of Tangiers.

2. A plant common in France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and is very troublesome; for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle. This is certainly the plant mentioned in Virgil's Georgicks, under the name of tribulus. Miller.

To CALVE. v. n. [from calf.]

1. To bring a calf: spoken of a cow.

When she's calv'd then set the dam aside,
And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth: and sometimes of men, by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd; no Romans, as they are not,
Though calved in the porch o' th' capital. Shakesp.
The grassy clods now calv'd; now half appear'd
The tawny lion, pawing to get free
His hinder parts. Milton.

CALVES-SNUOT, [antirrhinum.] A plant. Snapdragon.

CALVILLE. n. s. [Fr.] A sort of apple.

To CALUMNIATE. v. n. [calumnior, Lat.] To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subject all
To envious and calumniating time. Shakesp.
He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the rule of calumniating strongly, that some-thing will remain. Dryden's Fables, Pref.
Do I calumniate? thou ungrateful Vanoc.—
Perfidious prince!—Is it a calumny
To say that Gwendolen, betroth'd to Yver,
Was by her father first assur'd to Valens? A. Philips.

To CALU'MNIATE. v. n. To slander.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, make it their business to disdain and calumniate another. Spratt.

CALUMNIA'TION. n. s. [from calumniate] That which we call calumniation, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, to an offensive purpose. Ayliffe.

CALUMNIA'TOR. n. s. [from calumniate.] A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink-pot. L'Estrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mœvius were his declared foes and calumniators. Addison.

CALU'MNIOUS. adj. [from calumny.] Slanderous; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes. Shak.
With calumnious art
Of counterfeited truth, thus held their ears. Milton

CA'LUMNY. n. s. [calumnia, Lat.] Slander; false charge; groundless accusation: with against, or sometimes upon, before the person accused.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,
Thou shalt not escape calumny. Shakesp.
It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

CALX. n. s. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing power of fire; and will not be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it. Digby.

CA'LYCLE. n. s. [calyculus, Lat] A small bud of a plant. Dict.

CAMA'IEU. n. s. [from camachuia; which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they find another colour.]

1. A stone with various figures and representations of landskips, formed by nature
2. [In painting.] A term used when there is only one colour, and where the lights and shadows are of gold, wrought on a golden or azure ground. This kind of work is chiefly used to represent basso relievos. Chambers.

CA'MBER. n. s. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as a weight considerable being set upon it, it may in length of time be induced to a straight.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking glass, and by the further use of a certain attire, made of cambrick, upon her head, attained to an evil art. Tatler.
Confed'rate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambrick handkerchiefs reward the song. Gay.

CAME. The preterite of To come.

Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound
Tore the sad huntsman, grov'ling on the ground.
Addison.

CA'MEL. n. s. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. The one sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon its back. The other have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard. Camels will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment. Calmet.

Patient of thirst and toil,
Son of the desart! even the camel feels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast.
Thomson.

CAME'LOPARD. n. s. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Abyssinian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. The Italians call him giarassa. Trevoux.

CA'MELOT. } n. s. [from camel.]
CA'MLET. }

1. A kind of stuff originally made by a mixture of silk and camels hair; it is now made with wool and silk.

This habit was not of camels skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grograin, or the like; inasmuch as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

2. Hair cloth.

Meantime the pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eases of their hair the loaden herds:
Their camelots warm in tents the soldier hold,
And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold. Dryd.

CA'MERA OBSCURA. [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only through a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass. Martin.

His empty can, with ears half worn way,
Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

To CAN. v. n. [konnen, Dutch. It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood; as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]
1. To be able; to have power.
In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse: for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second, not to can. Bacon.
O, there's the wonder!
Mecænas and Agrippa, who can most
With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.
He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspire. Locke.
2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.
If she can make me blest! she only can:
Empire and wealth, and all she brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryd.
3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it, it is in my power; I may do it, it is allowed me: but in poetry they are confounded.
4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may or can be done.

CA'NDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CANE. n. s. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking staffs are made; a walking staff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind
Lose all mine own; God hath given me a measure
Short of his cane and body: must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure. Herbert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home. Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. They usually plant them in pieces a foot and a half below the top of the flower; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow.
Blackmore

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spanish inego de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown;
Judge-like thou sitt'st, to praise or to arraign
The flying skirmish of the darted cane. Dryden.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

To CANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking stick.

CANI'CULAR, adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as cancular, or dog days.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter, as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for unto them the dog-star ariseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which season unto them is winter.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

CA'NINE. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are scolds, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way. Addison.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs; from whence it is called canine. Arbuthnot

CA'NISTER. n. s. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

White lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring. Dryd.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CA'NKER. n. s. [cancer, Lat.] It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.

And loathful idleness he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast. Spenser
That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten. Joel, i. 4.
Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells; so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all. Shakesp.
A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him. Otway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies. Walton's Angler

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a public poverty. Bacon.
Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them. Atterbury.
No longer live the cankers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort;
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast and late carouse. Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dog rose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke. Shakesp.
Draw a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple, a single or canker rose. Peacham.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a contemn'd revolt,
And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound
By making many. Shakesp.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with cankers. Shakesp.

7. A disease in trees. Dict.

To CANKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt: implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in bands,
For falsed letters, and suborned wile. Fairy Queen.
I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high i' th' air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shak.
Or what the cross dire looking planet smite,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite. Milt.
To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue! fly:
The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne. Dryd.
Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day or secret night. Prior.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon.

To CA'NKER. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:
A tithe purloin'd cankers the whole estate. Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction. Addison.

CA'NKERBIT. particip. adj. [from canker and bit.] Bitten with an envenomed tooth.

Know, thy name is lost,
By treason's tooth bare-gnawn and cankerbit Shak.

CA'NNABINE. adj. [cannabinus, Lat.] Hempen. Dict.

CA'NNIBAL. n. s. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon.
They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Davies on Ireland.
It was my hint to speak
Of the cannibals that each other eat;
The anthropophagi. Shakesp.
The captive cannibal, opprest with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untamable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd;
And spent at last, and speechless, as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.
If an eleventh commandment had been given,
Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteemed it more difficult than all the rest. Bentley.

CA'NNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotcht him and notcht him like a carbonado.—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too. Shak.

CA'NNIPPERS. n. s. [corrupted from callipers; which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers, clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CA'NNON. n. s. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.

2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shakesp.
He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison. Clarendon.
The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly. Wilkins.

CANNON-BALL, CANNON-BULLET, CANNON-SHOT. n. s. [from cannon, ball, bullet, and shot.] The balls which are shot from great guns.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot. Wiseman's Surgery.
Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room. Locke.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day. Tatler.

To CANNON'ADE. v. a. To fire upon with cannon.

CANNON'IER. n. s. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cup;
And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannonier without,
The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth. Shakesp.
A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king. Hayward.

CA'NNOT. A word compounded of can and not: noting inability.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all. Locke.

CANO'A, CANOE'. n. s. A boat made by cutting the trunk of a tree into a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood; others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoa, which the Gauls upon the Rhone, used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army. Raleigh.
In a war against Semiramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes of one piece of timber. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CA'NON. n. s. [κανων.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no Hooker.
His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by. Hooker.
Religious canons, civil laws, are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakesp.
Canons in logick are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined Watts.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law, is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod, of the church. Ayliffe.
These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them by the canons of Ancyra. Stillingfleet.

3. The books of Holy Scripture: or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture. Ayliffe.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government, in causes ecclesiastical. Bacon.
Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.
A canon! that's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean;
Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all. Swift.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries. Ayliffe.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among chirurgeons.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds. Dict.

8. A large sort of printing letter, probably so called from being first used in printing a book of canons; or perhaps from its size, and therefore properly written cannon.

CA'NON BIT. n. s. [That part of the bit let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fair
His stubborn steed with canon bit,
Who under him did trample as the air. Spenser.

CA'NONESS. n. s. [canonissa, low Lat.] There are, in popish countries, women they call secular canonesses, living after the example of secular canons. Ayliffe.

CANO'NICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.
2. Constituting the canon.

Public readings there are of books and writings, not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known, the doctrine of virtuous conversation. Hooker.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures. Ralegh.

3. Regular; s ated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David: from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours Taylor.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience. Ayliffe.

CANO'NICALLY. adv. [from canonical.] In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who on a fasting day, bid his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it. Government of the Tongue.

CANO'NICALNESS. n. s. [from canonical.] The quality of being canonical.

CA'NONIST. n. s. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c. Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell. Pope.

CANONIZA'TION. n. s. [from canonize.] The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations. Addison.

To CA'NONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster celestial honour, became suitor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint. Bacon.

By those hymns all shall approve
Us canoniz'd for love. Donne.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints. Stillingfleet.

CA'NONRY, CA'NONSHIP. n. s. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical benefice in some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it. Ayliffe.

CA'NOPIED. adj. [from canopy.] Covered with a canopy.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,
With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

CA'NOPY. n. s. [canopeum, low Lat.] A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,
And placed under a stately canopy,
The warlike feats of both those knights to see. Fairy Queen.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy,
And summon'd every restless eye to sleep. Fairfax.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies, and beds of state. Dryd.

To CA'NOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,
Like friends did all embrace;
And their large branches did display
To canopy the place. Dryden.

CA'NOROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throats, and short. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CANT. n. s. [probably from cantus, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quaint.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.
2. A particular form of speaking, peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession. Dryden.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion. Addison's Freeholder.

Astrologers, with an old paltry cant, and a few pot-hooks for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world. Swift's Predictions for the year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer for a most judicious and formidable critick. Addison's Spectator.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while pow'r you want,
And preaching in the self-denying cant,
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authors, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language. Swift.

5. Auction.

Numbers of these tenants, or their descendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives. Swift.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions; or in any kind of formal, affected language; or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry. Glanville.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristical note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party. Sanderson.

The busy, subtile serpents of the law
Did first my mind from true obedience draw;
While I did limits to the king prescribe,
And took for oracles that canting tribe. Roscommon.

Unskill'd in schemes by planets to foreshow,
Like canting rascals, how the wars will go
Dryden's Juvenal.

CANTATA. n. s. [Ital.] A song.

CANTA'TION. n. s. [from canto, Lat.] The act of singing.

CA'NTER. n. s. [from cant.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELFLOWER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hand gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; said to be derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTHA'RIDES. n. s. [Latin.] Spanish flies, used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig-tree, the pine-tree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and abstersive. Bacon's Natural History.

CA'NTHUS. n. s. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, the external the lesser canthus. Quincy.

A gentlewoman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, or angle of her eye. Wiseman.

CA'NTICLE. n. s. [from canto, Lat.] A song: used generally for a song in scripture.

This right of estate, in some nations, is yet more significantly expressed by Moses in his canticles, in the person of God to the Jews Bacon's Holy War.

CANTI'LIVERS. n. s. Pieces of wood framed into the front or other sides of an house, to sustain the moulding and eaves over it. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

CA'NTION. n. s. [cantio, Lat.] Song; verses. Not now in use.

CA'NTLE. n. s. [kant, Dutch, a corner; eschantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners. Skinner.

See how this river comes, me crankling in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle out.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

To CA'NTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,
That must be cantled, and the judge go snack.
Dryden's Juvenal.

CA'NTLET. n. s. [from cantle.] A piece; a fragment.

Nor shield nor armour can their force oppose,
Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,
And no defence in his bor'd arms is found. Dryd.

CA'NTO. n. s. [Ital.] A book; or section, of a poem.

Why, what would you do?——
——Make a willow cabbin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal cantos of contemned love.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

CA'NTON. n. s.

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains adjacent to straits and ways. Bacon's Holy War.

To CA'NTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Famili s shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves. Locke.

It would certainly be for the g od of mankind, to have all the mighty em ires and monarchies of the world cantoned out into petty states and principalities. Addison on Italy

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories cantoned out into parcels by other princes, during his own life and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France. Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness Watts on the Mind.

To CA'NTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Irel nd cantonized among ten persons of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantonized amongst a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights. Howel

CA'NTRED. n. s. [The same in Wales as an hundred in England. For cantre, in the British language, signifieth an hundred. Cowell.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns. Davies on Ireland.

CA'NVASS. n. s. [canevas Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.]

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The master commanded forthwith to set on all the canvass they could, and fly homeward. Sidney

And eke the pens, that did his pini ns bind,
Were like main yards with flying canvass lin'd. Spenser

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,
And build a city in an hour's space. Fanfax.

Where'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all, she brings. Wal.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,
And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;
Him whom no danger, were he there could fright,
Now absent, every little noise can wound. Dryden.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vied
With nature in a generous strife,
And touch'd the canvass into life. Addison.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting. [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon.

To CA'NVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from cannabasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

1. To sift; to examine. [from canvass a straining cloth.]

I have made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The curs discovered a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they canvassed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange.

To CA'NVASS. v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an officer, and being, by some that canvassed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lanthorn seeking a man. Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting, for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CA'NY. adj. [from cane.]

1. Full of canes.
2. Consisting of canes.

But in his way lights on the barren plains
Of Sericana, where Chineses drive,
With sails and wind, their cany waggons light. Milton.

CA'NZONET. n. s. [canzonetta Ital.] A little song.

Vecchi was most pleasing of all others, for his conceit and variety, as well his madrigals as canzonets. Peacham

Where Henderson, and th' other masses,
Were sent to cap texts, and put cases. Hudibras.

Sure it is a pitiful pretence to ingenuity that can be thus kept up, there being little need of any other faculty but memory, to be able to cap texts. Government of the Tongue.

There is an author of ours, whom I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping characters. Atterbury.

CAP à pè, } [cap à piè, Fr.] From head
CAP à piè. } to foot; all over.

A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, cap à pè,
Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them. Shakesp. Hamlet.

There for the two contending knights he sent;
Arm'd cap à piè, with rev'rence low they bent. Dryden

A woodlouse,
That folds up itself in itself for a house,
As round as a ball, without head, without tail,
Inclos'd cap à pè in a strong coat of mail. Swift.

CAP-PAPER. A sort of coarse brownish paper. So called from being formed into a kind of cap to hold commodities.

Having, for trial sake, filtered it through cap-paper, there remained in the filtre a powder. Boyle.

CAPABI'LITY. n. s. [from capable.] Capacity; the quality of being capable.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unus'd. Shakesp.

CA'PABLE. adj. [capable, Fr.]

1. Sufficient to contain; sufficiently capacious.

When we consider so much of that space, as is equal to, or capable to receive a body of any assigned dimensions. Locke.

2. Endued with powers equal to any particular thing.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

When you hear any person give his judgment, consider with yourself whether he be a capable judge. Watts.

3. Intelligent; able to understand.

Look you, how pale he glares;
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shakesp. Hamlet.

4. Intellectually capacious; able to receive.

I am much bound to God, that he hath endued you with one capable of the best instructions. Digby.

5. Susceptible.

The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk
Or stiff compacted clay, capacious found. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Extensive; equal to much knowledge, or great design.

There are some persons of a good genius, and a capacious mind, who write and speak very obscurely. Watts.

CAPA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from capacious.] The power of holding or receiving; largeness.

A concave measure, of known and denominate capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. In like manner to a given weight the weight of all other bodies may be reduced and so found out. Holder on Time.

To CAPA'CITATE. v. a. [from capacity.] To make capable; to enable; to qualify.

By this instruction we may be capacitated to observe those errours. Dryden

These sort of men were sycophants only, and were endued with arts of life, to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great. Tatler.

CAPA'CITY. n. s. [capacite, Fr.]

1. The power of holding or containing any thing.

Had our palace the capacity
To camp this host, we would all sup together.
Shakesp.

Notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soe'er,
But falls into abatement and low price.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

For they that most and greatest things embrace,
Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,
As streams enlarg'd, enlarge their channels space.
Davies.

Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think, may be called capacity. Locke.

2. Room; space.

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Boyle.

3. The force or power of the mind.

No intellectual creature is able, by capacity, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge. Hooker.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacity to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire, for that may be impossible. South.

An heroic poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

4. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include
A cause with such capacities endued,
Some other cause o'er nature must preside. Black.

5. State; condition: character.

A miraculous revolution reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion to their old condition of masons, smiths, and carpenters; that in this capacity, they might repair what, as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPA'RISON. n. s. [caparazon a great cloke, Span.] A horse-cloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture. Farrier's Dict.

To CA'PER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance frolicksomely.

The truth is, I am only old in judgment; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakesp. Henry IV.

2. To skip for merriment.

Our master
Cap'ring to eye her. Shakesp. Tempest.

His nimble hand's instinct then taught each string
A cap'ring cheerfulness, and made them sing
To their own dance. Crashaw.

The family tript it about, and capered like hailstones bounding from a marble floor.
Arbuthnot's John Bull.

3. To dance: spoken in contempt.

The stage would need no force, nor song, nor dance,
Nor capering monsieur from active France. Rowe.

CA'PERER. n. s. [from caper.] A dancer: in contempt.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford;
No less the nimble caperer on the cord:
But these are still insipid stuff to thee,
Coop'd in a ship, and toss'd upon the sea.
Dryden's Juv.

CAPERBUSH. n. s. [capparis, Lat.]

The fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear. This plant grows in the South of France, in Spain, and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating. Miller.

CA'PIAS. n. s. [Lat.] A writ of two sorts: One before judgment, called capias ad respondendum, in an action personal, if the sheriff, upon the first writ of distress, return that he has no effects in his jurisdiction. The other is a writ of execution after judgment. Cowell.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us. Swift.

3. That which affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurrent both in the life and conditions of private men.
Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is errour; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition. Hooker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion. Atterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been
Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread
All generations; and had hither come,
From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor.
Paradise Lost.

He saith, that if there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government; which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence. Bacon.

Here was the case; an army of English, wasted and tired with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, fresh and in vigour. Bacon.

I can but be a slave wherever I am; so that taken or not taken, 'tis all a case to me. L'Estrange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends; he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel. Taylor's Holy Living.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have fewer ill impressions; but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind. Swift.

3. [In physick.] State of the body; state of the disease.

It was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case. Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochondriacal cases. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. History of a disease.
5. The state of facts juridically considered: as, the lawyers cited many cases in their pleas.

If he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one thing to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases: so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt. Bacon's Ess.

6. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness or fat. In case, is lusty or fat.

Thou lyest, most ignorant monster, I am in case to justle a constable. Shakesp. Tempest.

Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you. L'Estrange.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action, now be here. Hudibras.
For if the sire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copy'd in his famish'd race. Dry. Virg.
The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face;
Look'd with an easy careless mein,
A perfect stranger to the spleen. Swift.

7. Contingence; possible event.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue, that there is a god, the man is lost and undone for ever. Tillotson.

8. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case. Sidney
It is strange that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge, in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies. Tillotson.

9. Representation of any fact or question.

10. The variation of nouns.

The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension. Clark's Lat. Gram.

11. In case. [in caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

For in case it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to shew us where we shall find it; that we may say these were the orders of the apostles. Hooker.
A sure retreat to his forces, in case they should have an ill day, or unlucky chance in the field. Bacon's Henry VII.
This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, either by their evil destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost. Hayward.

To CASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a case or cover.

Case ye, case ye; on with your vizours; there's money of the king's coming down the hill. Shakesp. Henry IV.
The cry went once for thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou wou'dst not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in a tent. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Like a fall'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,
Cas'd in green scales, the crocodile extends. Thomson.

2. To cover as a case.

Then comes my fit again; I had else been perfect,
As broad and general as the casing air. Shakesp. Macbeth.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius. Dryden.
They have already cashiered several of their followers as mutineers. Addison's Freeholder.
The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd,
Contrives, as he is hated, to be feared. Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate; which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.
Some cashier, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious. Locke.

CASK. n. s. [casque, Fr. cadus, Lat.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask. Harvey.
Perhaps to-morrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,
Whose title, and whose age, with mould o'ergrown,
The good old cask for ever keeps unknown. Dryd.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniencies grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away. Raleigh.

CASK. } n. s. [casque, Fr. cassis, Lat.]
CASQUE. } A helmet; armour for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakesp.
And these
Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;
Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light. Dryden.
Why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask
His wrinkled brows? Addison.

CA'SKET. n. s. [a diminutive of caisse a chest, Fr. casse, cassette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakesp.
O ignorant poor man! what dost thou bear
Lock'd up within the casket of thy breast?
What jewels and what riches hast thou there?
What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest? Davies.
Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the casket of heav'n's richest store. Milt.
That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure
In one dear casket, and sav'd only that. Otway.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,

CA'TCHPOLL. n. s. [from catch and poll.] A serjeant; a bumbailiff.

Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, it seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause. Cowell.

They call all temporal businesses undersheriffries, as if they were but matters for undersheriffs and catchpolls, though many times those undersheriffries do more good than their high speculations. Bacon's Essays.

Another monster,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods
With force incredible and magick charms
First have endued, if he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor. Philips.

To any well-deserving friend;
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair. Shakesp. Henry IV.

My lord, you do not well, in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract. Shakesp. Henry VI.

He cavils first at the poet's insisting so much upon the effects of Achilles's rage. Pope's Notes on the Iliad.

To CA'VIL. v. a. To receive or treat with objections.

Thou didst accept them: wilt thou enjoy the good,
Then cavil the conditions? Paradise Lost.

CA'VIL. n. s. [from the verb.] False or frivolous objections.

Wiser men consider how subject the best things have been unto cavil, when wits, possessed with disdain, have set them up as their mark to shoot at. Hooker.

Several divines, in order to answer the cavils of those adversaries to truth and morality, began to find out farther explanations. Swift.

CAVILLA'TION. n. s. [from cavil.] The disposition to make captious objection, the practice of objecting.

I might add so much concerning the large odds between the case of the eldest churches in regard of heathens, and ours in respect of the church of Rome, that very cavillation itself should be satisfied. Hooker.

CA'VILLER. n. s. [cavillator, Lat.] A man fond of making objections; an unfair adversary; a captious disputant.

The candour which Horace shews, is that which distinguishes a critick from a caviller; he declares, that he is not offended at little faults, which may be imputed to inadvertency. Addison's Guardian.

There is, I grant, room still left for a caviller to misrepresent my meaning. Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

CA'VILLINGLY. adv. [from cavilling.] In a cavilling manner.

CA'VILLOUS. adj. [from cavil.] Unfair in argument; full of objections.

Those persons are said to be cavillous and unfaithful advocates, by whose fraud and iniquity justice is destroyed. Ayliffe.

CAVIN. n. s. [French. In the military art.] A natural hollow, fit to cover a body of troops, and consequently facilitate their approach to a place. Dict.

CA'VITY. n. s. [cavitas, Latin.] Hollowness; hollow; hollow place.

The vowels are made by a free passage of breath, vocalized through the cavity of the mouth; the said cavity being differently shaped by the postures of the throat, tongue, and lips. Holder's Elements of Speech.

There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishing kind. Dryden's Dedication to Æneid.

Matrices put together with wonderful art in the several cavities of the skull.
Addison's Spectator.

An instrument with a small cavity, like a small spoon, dipt in oil, may fetch out the stone.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

If the atmosphere was reduced into water, it would not make an orb above thirty-two feet deep, which would soon be swallowed up by the cavity of the sea, and the depressed parts of the earth. Bentley.

CAUK. n. s. A coarse talky spar.
Woodward.

CA'UKY. adj. [from cauk.] A white, opaque, cauky, spar, shot or pointed.
Woodward on Fossils.

CAUL. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The net in which women inclose their hair; the hinder part of a woman's cap.

Ne spared they to strip her naked all;
Then when they had despoil'd her tire and caul,
Such as she was, their eyes might her behold.
Spenser.

Her head with ringlets of her hair is crown'd;
And in a golden caul the curls are bound.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Any kind of small net.

An Indian mantle of feathers, and the feathers wrought into a caul of packthread.
Grew's Museum.

3. The omentum; the integument in which the guts are inclosed.

The caul serves for the warming the lower belly, like an apron or piece of woollen cloth. Hence a certain gladiatour, whose caul Galen cut out, was so liable to suffer cold, that he kept his belly constantly covered with wool. Ray.

The beast they then divide, and disunite
The ribs and limbs, observant of the rite:
On these, in double cauls involv'd with art,
The choicest morsels lay. Pope's Odyssey.

CAULIFEROUS. adj. [from caulis a stalk, and fero to bear, Lat.] A term in botany for such plants as have a true stalk, which a great many have not.

CA'ULIFLOWER. n. s. [from caulis, Lat. the stalk of a plant.] A species of cabbage.

Towards the end of the month, earth up your winter-plants and sallad herbs; and plant forth your cauliflowers and cabbage, which were sown in August. Evelyn's Kalendar.

To* CAULK. See To* CALK.

To* CA'UPONATE. v. n. [caupono, Lat.] To keep a victualling-house; to sell wine or victuals. Dict.

CA'USABLE. adj. [from causo, low Lat.] That which may be caused, or effected by a cause.

That may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in another.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CA'USAL. adj. [causalis, low Lat.] Relating to causes; implying or containing causes.

Every motion owning a dependence on prerequired motors, we can have no true knowledge of any, except we would distinctly pry into the whole method of causal concatenation.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

Causal propositions are, where two propositions are joined by causal particles; as, houses were not built, that they might be destroyed; Rehoboam was unhappy, because he followed evil counsel.
Watts's Logick.

CAUSA'LITY. n. s. [causalitas, low Lat.] The agency of a cause; the quality of causing.

As he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, in his very essence, as being the soul of their causalities, and the essential cause of their existences. Brown's Vulg. Err.

By an unadvised transiliency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities. Glanville's Scepsis.

CA'USALLY. adv. [from causal] According to the order or series of causes.

Thus may it more be causally made out, what Hippocrates affirmeth. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CAUSA'TION. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] The act or power of causing.

Thus doth he sometimes delude us in the conceits of stars and meteors, besides their allowable actions, ascribing effects thereunto of independent causation. Brown's Vulg. Err

CA'USATIVE. adj. [a term in grammar.] That expresses a cause or reason.

CAUSA'TOR. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] A causer; an author of any effect.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the invisible condition of the first causator, it was out of the power of earth, or the areopagy of hell, to work them from it.
Brown's Vulg Err.

CAUSE. n. s. [causa, Lat.]

1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.

The wise and learned, amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth: neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest shall bear some other sight,
As cause will be obey'd. Shakesp.

So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.

Thus, royal Sir! to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryd.

Æneas wond'ring stood: then ask'd the cause,
Which to the stream the crowding people draws.
Dryden.

Even he,
Lamenting that there had been cause of enmity,
Will often wish fate had ordain'd you friends.
Rowe.

3. Reason of debate; subject of litigation.

O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against thyself!
Bifold authority. Shakesp.

Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Deuter.

4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Tickell

To* CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining.
Raleigh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none.
South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair?
Dryden's Fables.

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

CA'USELESLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelesly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

CA'USELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth yplight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might.
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

And me and mine threats not with war but death;
Thus causeless hatred endless is uneath. Fairfax.

The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded,
Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denh.

CA'USER. n. s. [from cause.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakesp

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial causer of moral effects Rogers.

CA'USEY. } n. s. [chaussée, Fr. This
CA'USEWAY. } word, by a false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causeway.] A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shuppim the lot came forth westward by the causey. 1 Chron. xxvi. 16.

The other way Satan went down,
The causeway to hell-gate. Milton.

But that broad causeway will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day.
Dryden.

Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows;
Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CA'USTICAL. } adj. [καυστικὸς.] Epithets
CA'USTICK. } of medicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness of asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines, or escaroticks. Wiseman's Surg.

I proposed eradicating by escaroticks, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman's Surgery.

Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles.
Arbuthnot.

CA'USTICK. n. s. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and *caustick*s, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing *caustick*s ply their spiteful pow'r,
Emeticks raush, and keen cathartick scour. Garth.

CA'UTEL. n. s. [cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple: a word disused.

Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no soil of cautel doth besmirch
The virtue of his will. Shakesp.

CA'UTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cautelous artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice. Shakesp.

CA'UTELOUSLY. adv. [from cautelous.]

1. Cunningly; slily; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cautelously get the start and advantage; yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the sciatica side of Jacob, do cautelously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CAUTERIZA'TION. n. s. [from cauterize.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wiseman.

To CA'UTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
Consuming it with speaking. Shakesp.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insects, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon's Natural History.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CA'UTERY. n. s. [καυτήριον.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick, or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wiseman's Surgery.

CA'UTION. n. s. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.

2. Security for.

Such conditions, and *caution*s of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear. Sidney.

The Cedar, upon this new acquest, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements. Howell.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution, by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and *caution*s of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best *caution*s and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbuthnot.

5. Warning.

To CA'UTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare?
Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The diff'rent shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CA'UTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southerne.

Is there no security for the island of Britain? Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CA'UTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage. Swift.

CA'UTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner; warily.

Th y know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

CA'UTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness. King Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison

To CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Russet-pated choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shakesp.

A wink of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region. Addison.

The rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds,
And ceaseless caws. Thomson's Spring.

To CEASE. v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist: with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;
My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryden.

2. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor man shall never cease out of the land. Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellection, cease from that moles corporea, and are no longer in it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see
She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden.

4. To rest.

The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours. Spratt.

To CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd
With slight denial. Shakesp.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural History.

Cease then this impious rage. Milton.

But he, her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-eyed peace. Milton.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease
The dire debate, nor yet command the peace. Dryden.

CEASE. n. s. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws
What 's near it with it. Shakesp.

CE'ASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,
On which my endless tears were hootless spent. Fairfax.

All these with ceaseless praise his works behold,
Both day and night. Milton.

Like an oak
That stands secure, though all the winds employ
Their ceaseless roar; and only sheds its leaves,
Or mast, which the revolving spring restores. Philips.

CE'CITY. n. s. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CECU'TIENCY. n. s. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CE'DAR. n. s. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is ever green: the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinated. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly cloathed with green leaves, so regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England, for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Manudrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and sound. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'rful wind. Shakesp.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [cælo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he over-laid with fine gold 2 Chronicles.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING. n. s. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood; down rush'd the rain Impetuous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polish'd brass their trembling light,
The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden.

CE'LANDINE. n. s. [chelidoneum, Lat.] A plant.

The swallows use celandine, the linnet euphragia. More.

CE'LATURE. n. s. [cælatura, Lat.] The art of engraving, or cutting in figures.

To CE'LEBRATE. v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages. Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath. 2 Maccabees.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;
While England celebrates your safe return. Dryd.

CELEBRA'TION. n s. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it,
While you are willing it shall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keep,
According to my birth. Shakesp.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety, and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

CELE'BRIOUS. adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were despoiled of their glory, even then Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured with sacrifices the Most High God, whom that nation worshipped. Grew

CELE'BRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELE'BRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELE'BRITY. n. s. [celebritas, Lat.] Publick and splendid transaction.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence. Bacon.

CELE'RIACK. n. s. A species of parsley; it is also called turnep rooted celery.

CELE'RITY. n. s. [celeritas, Lat.] Swiftness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse; for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity to make head against them. Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,
In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Shakesp.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever encreaseth the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CE'LERY. n. s. A species of parsley; which see.

CELE'STIAL. adj. [celestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superior regions.

There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning. Shak.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of other climes to their own. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.

Play that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakesp.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.

Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd? Dryden

Telemachus, his bloomy face
Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

CELE'STIAL. n s. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild the prince precedes,
And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads. Pope.

CELE'STIALLY. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

To CELE'STIFY. v. a. [from celestis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing. Not used.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestrified, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown's Vulg. Errours

CE'LIACK. adj [κοιλία the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints. Arbuthnot on Aliments

CE'LIBACY. n. s. [from cælebs, Lat.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

CE'LIBATE. n. s. [cælibatus, Lat.] Single life.

3. End of action; the state of ceasing to act.

The serum, which is mixed with an alkali, being poured out to that which is mixed with an acid, raiseth an effervescence; at the cessation of which, the salts, of which the acid was composed, will be regenerated. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. A pause of hostility, without peace.

When the succours of the poor protestants in Ireland were diverted, I was intreated to get them some respite, by a cessation. King Charles.

CESSA'VIT. n. s. [Latin.]

A writ that lies upon this general ground, that the person, against whom it is brought, hath, for two years, omitted to perform such service, or pay such rent, as he is obliged by his tenure; and hath not, upon his land or tenement, sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. Cowell.

CESSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.] The quality of receding, or giving way, without resistance.

If the subject strucken be of a proportionate cessibility, it seems to dull and deaden the stroke; whereas, if the thing strucken be hard, the stroke seems to lose no force, but to work a greater effect. Digby on the Soul.

CE'SSIBLE. adj. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.] Easy to give way.

If the parts of the strucken body be so easily cessible, as without difficulty the stroke can divide them, then it enters into such a body, till it has spent its force. Digby on the Soul.

CE'SSION. n. s. [cession, Fr. cessio, Lat.]

1. Retreat; the act of giving way.

Sound is not produced without some resistance, either in the air or the body percussed; for if there be a mere yielding, or cession, it produceth no sound. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Resignation; the act of yielding up or quitting to another.

A parity in their council would make and secure the best peace they can with France, by a cession of Flanders to that crown, in exchange for other provinces. Temple.

CE'SSIONARY. adj. [from cession.] As, a cessionary bankrupt, one who has delivered up all his effects. Martin.

CE'SSMENT. n. s. [from cess.] An assessment or tax. Dict.

CE'SSOR. n. s. [from cesso, Lat.]
In law, he that ceaseth or neglecteth so long to perform a duty belonging to him, as that by his cess, or cessing, he incurreth the danger of law, and hath, or may have, the writ cessavit brought against him. Where it is said the tenant cesseth, such phrase is to be understood as if it were said, the tenant cesseth to do that which he ought, or is bound, to do by his land or tenement. Cowell.

CE'STUS. n. s. [Latin.] The girdle of Venus.
Venus, without any ornament but her own beauties, not so much as her own cestus. Addison's Spectator.

To this office the duke of Ancaster makes an hereditary claim. Chambers.

2. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bedchamber. Chambers.

Humbly complaining to her deity,
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. Shakesp

He was made lord steward, that the staff of chamberlain might be put into the hands of his brother. Clarendon.

A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage. Pope.

3. A servant who has the care of the chambers.

Think'st thou
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? Shakesp

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
We will with wine and wassel convince. Shakesp.

He serv'd at first Amilia's chamberlain. Dryden's Fables.

4. A receiver of rents and revenues; as, chamberlain of the exchequer, of Chester, of the city of London. Chambers.

CHA'MBERLAINSHIP. n. s. [from chamberlain.] The office of a chamberlain.

CHA'MBERMAID. n. s. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in her chamber.

Men will not hiss,
The chambermaid was named Ciss. Ben Jonson.

Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,
Trudges to town, and first turns chambermaid. Pope.

When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no, he used to consult one of his lady's chambermaids. Swift.

If these nurses ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practised by chambermaids among us, they are publickly whipped. Swift.

To CH'AMBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and chambleted; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon's Natural History.

CHA'MBREL of a horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAME'LEON. n. s. [χαμαίλεων.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it festens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, ending in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, catched with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes, when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour: and sometimes, if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Calmet.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long, on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shak.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after. Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryd.

As the chameleon, which is known
To have no colours of his own,
But borrows from his neighbour's hue
His white or black, his green or blue. Prior.

To CHA'MFER. v. a. [chambrer, Fr.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.

CHA'MFER. } n. s. [from To chamfer.]
CHA'MFRET. } A small furrow or gutter on a column.

CHA'MLET. n. s. [See CAMELOT.] Stuff made originally of camel's hair.

To make a chamlet, draw five lines, waved overthwart, if your diapering consist of a double line. Peacham on Drawing.

CHAMOIS. n. s. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whose skin is made into soft leather, called among us shammy.

These are the beasts which you shall eat; the ox, the sheep, and wild ox, and the chamois.
Deuteronomy.

CHA'MOMILE. n. s. [χαμαιμῆλον.] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Fresh costmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning setuale.
Spenser.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. Shakesp.

Posset drink with chamomile flowers.
Flower on the Humours.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed reign'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb. Milton's Par. Lost.

At his command
The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold.
Dryden.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part Spectator.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidoris, to come near him. Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and irefully to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker

His jaws did not answer equally to one another, but, by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wiseman.

CHA'MPAIGN. n. s. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd
We make thee lady. Shakesp.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof. Raleigh

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other straight, and left between Fair champaign, with less rivers interven'd. Milt.

CHA'MPERTORS. n. s. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains.
Cowell.

CHA'MPERTY. n. s. [champart, Fr. In law] A maintenance of any man in his suit, while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowell.

CHAMPI'GNON. n. s. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He viler friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,
Secure for you, himself champignons eats. Dryd.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob. Woodward.

CHA'MPION. n. s. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.

In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for mast'ry, and to battle bring Their embryon atoms. Milton's Par. Lost.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy!
Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right.
Dryden.

1. A hero; a stout warriour; one bold in contest.

A stouter champion never handled sword. Shak.

This makes you incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another.
Cowell.

To CHA'MPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, Fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shakesp.

CHANCE. n s. [chance Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th'ut thought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakesp

The only man, of all that chance could bring
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering.
Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself, a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them. Bentley

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance. Bacon's Essays.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth, as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents. South.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead;
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance
Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canst not see.
Pope.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakesp.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear.
Shakesp.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet
Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address. Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,
They met like chance companions on the way.
Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on, but think;——
Thou hast thy mistress still Shakesp.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? Shakesp.

Ay, Casca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Cæsar looks so sad. Shakesp.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks victuallers, whom he easily took. Knolles's History of the Turks.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind.
Pope's Odyssey.

CHA'NCEFUL. adj. [chance and full.] Hazardous. Out of use.

Myself would offer you t' accompany
In this advent'rous chanceful jeopardy. Spenser.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. s. [from chance and medley.] In law.

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain: in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself Cowell.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley. Smith.

CHA'NCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney.

CHA'NCEL. n. s. [from cancelli, Lat. lattices, with which the chancel was inclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should say service in the chancel. Hooker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumferance.
Addison on Italy.

CHA'NCELLOR. n. s. [cancellarius, Lat. chancellier, Fr. from cancellare literas, vel scriptum lineâ per medium ductâ damnare; and seemeth of itself likewise to be derived à cancellis, which signify all one with κιγκλὶς a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment seats were compassed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæsitus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,
Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.
Verses of Nigel de Wetekre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius at the first signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharios, scil. qui conscribendis et excipiendis judicum actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowell.

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Is this an hour
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.
Dryden, jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms, of their government; so that he was, in a manner, chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. Chancellor in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Chancellor of a Cathedral. A dignitary whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. Chancellor of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power with others to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only. Cowell. Chambers.

5. Chancellor of an University. The principal magistrate who at Oxford holds his office during life, but at Cambridge he may be elected every three years.

6. Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order. Chambers.

CHA'NCELLORSHIP, n. s. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camden.

CHA'NCERY, n. s. [from chancellor; probably chancellery, then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal. Cowell.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishop's letters under the seal episcopal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'NCRE, n. s. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies. It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre. Wiseman.

CHA'NCROUS, adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre, ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancrous callus. Wiseman.

CHANDE'LIER, n. s. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHA'NDLER, n. s. [chandelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The sack that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe Shakesp.

But whether black or lighter dyes are worn,
The chandler's basket on his shoulder born,
With tallow spots thy coat. Gay

CHA'NFRIN, n. s. [Old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE, v. a. [changer, Fr. cambio, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtile. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but heres the curse,
They change for better, and we change for worse.
Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was.

Thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest;
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakesp.

Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Ecclus.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony; like as in a psaltery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always sounds. Wisdom.

5. To mend the disposition or mind.

I would she were in heaven, so she could
Intreat some power to change this currish Jew.
Shakesp.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moidore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE, v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration; as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.

One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,
Would better fit his chamber. Shakesp.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.

I am weary of this moon: would he would change. Shakesp.

CHANGE, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you. Shakesp.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wond'rous changes of a fatal scene,
Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill-breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know
A diff'rent master and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love.
Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former.

The hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakesp.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair;
And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryd.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five-and-twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs.

The bar, the bench, the change, the schools and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiaries. L'Estrange.

CHA'NGEABLE, adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta; for thy mind is a very opal. Shakesp.

CHA'NGEABLENESS, n. s. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness, with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Addison.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker.

CHA'NGEABLY, adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL, adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound plots and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted. Spenser.

Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHANGELING. n. s. [from change; the word arises from an old superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her base elfin breed there for thee left:
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling. Shakesp.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heaven, and thence shut out,
Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden

Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.

Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
That gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation. Shakesp.

'Twas not long
Before from world to world they swung;
As they had turn'd from side to side,
And as they changelings liv'd, they died. Hudibras.

4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous speech.

I folded the writ up in the form of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known. Shakesp.

CHA'NGER, n. s. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money; money-changer.

CHA'NNEL, n. s. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shakesp.

So th' injur'd sea, which from her wonted course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.

Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea. Woodward

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longways.

Complaint, and hot desires, the lover's hell,
And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell. Dryden's Fables.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries; as the British Channel, between Britain and France; St. George's Channel, between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.

To CHA'NNEL, v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces. Shakesp.

The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Wotton's Architecture.

Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

To CHANT, v. a. [chanter, Fr.]

1. To sing.

Wherein the cheerful birds of sundry kind
Do chant sweet musick. Fairy Queen.

2. To celebrate by song.

The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains. Bramhall.

3. To sing in the cathedral service.

To CHANT, v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos vi. 7.

Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;
And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight to chant aloft in air. Dryd.

CHANT, n. s. [from the verb] Song; melody.

A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud. Milt.

CHA'NTER, n. s. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Natures lays. Wotton.

Jove's etherial lays, resistless fire
The chanter's soul and raptur'd song inspire,
Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice. Pope.

CHA'NTICLEER, n. s. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And chearful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
Had warned once, that Phœbus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Spenser.

Hark, hark, I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer Shakesp.

Stay, the chearful chanticleer
Tells you that the time is near. Ben Jonson.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden's Remains.

Within this homestead lived without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer.
Dryden's Fables.

CHA'NTRESS, n. s. [from chant.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, chantress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even song. Milton.

CHA'NTRY, n. s. [from chant.]

Chantry is a church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Cowell.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shak.

CHA'OS, n. s. [chaos, Lat. χάος.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion! irregular mixture.

Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done. K. Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimick fancy wakes,
Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes,
From words and things, ill sorted, and misjoin'd;
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind.
Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAO'TICK, adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthly particles subsided, then those several beds were, in all probability, reposited in the earth. Derham.

To CHAP, v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut. This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places. Burnet.

Then would unbalanc'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the russet plain.
Blackmore.

CHAP. n. s. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it are filled up again. Burnet's Theory.

CHAP, n. s. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.

The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female. Grew's Museum.

CHAPE, n. s. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. Shakesp.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword. Phillips's World of Words.

CHA'PEL, n. s. [capella, Lat.]

A chapel is of two sorts; either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build; or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferiour curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is. Cowell.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Sidney.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shakesp.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps errour to rear up a chapel hard by. Howel.

A chapel will I build with large endowment. Dryd.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England, Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'PELESS, adj. [from chape.] Wanting a chape.

An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shakesp.

CHAPE'LLANY, n. s. [from chapel.]

A chapellany is usually said to be that which does not subsist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHAPELRY, n. s. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHA'PERON, n. s. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Camden

He overlaid their chapiters and their fillets with gold. Exodus.

CHAPLAIN, n. s. [capellanus, Lat.]

1. He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach. Cowell.

Wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour,
To hear from him a matter of some moment. Shak.
Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life. Shakesp.

2. One that officiates in domestick worship.

A chief governor can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINSHIP, n. s. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.
2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.

CHA'PLESS, adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now chapless, and knocked about the muzzard with a sexton's spade. Shakesp.
Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless bones. Shakesp.

CHA'PLET, n. s. [chapelet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.

Upon old Hyems' chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shakesp.
I strangely long to know
Whether they nobler chaplets wear,
Those that their mistress' scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.
All the quire was grac'd,
With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd. Dryden.
The winding ivy chaplet to invade,
And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade. Dryden.
They made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of paternosters and ave-marias. A different sort of chaplets is also used by the Mahometans.
3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.
4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pummel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider. Farrier's Dict.
5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHA'PMAN, n. s. [ceapman, Sax.] A cheapner; one that offers as a purchaser.

Fair Diomede, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy. Shak.
Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,
And understand 'em as most chapmen do. Ben Jonson.
There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick, these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquorish chapmen of such wares. Wotton
He dressed two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.
Their chapmen they betray,
Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey. Dryden.

CHAPS, n. s [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.

So on the downs we see
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate so. Sidney.
Open your mouth; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again. Shakesp.
Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,
And long to temper their dry chaps in blood. Dryden.

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHAPT, CHA'PPED, participle pass. [from To chap.]

Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt. Ben Jonson.
Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sunburnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid. Dryden's Fables.

CHA'PTER, n s. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.]

1. A division of a book.

The first book we divide into three sections; whereof the first is these three chapters. Burnet's Theory.
If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture, to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South

2. From hence comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things; for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter. L'Estrange.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church. Cowell

The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance. Addison on Italy.

4. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction. Ayliffe's Par.
5. A decretal epistle. Ayliffe's Parerg.
6. Chapter-house; the place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

Though the canonical constitution does strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter-house. Ayliffe's Parerg.

CHA'PTREL, n. s. [probably from chapiter.] The capitals of pillars, or pilasters, which support arches, commonly called imposts.

Let the keystone break without the arch, so much as you project over the jaums with the chaptrels. Moxon.

CHAR, n. s. [of uncertain derivation.] A fish found only in Winander meer, in Lancashire.

To* CHAR, v. a. [See CHARCOAL.] To burn wood to a black cinder.

Spraywood, in charring, parts into various cracks. Woodward.

CHAR, n. s. [cynne work, Sax. Lye. It is derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business; or cync, Sax. care; or keeren, Dutch, to sweep.] Work done by the day; a single job or task.

A meer woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chars. Shakesp.
She, harvest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and two-pence, were her daily hire. Dryden.

To* CHAR, v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

CHA'RWOMAN, n. s. [from char and woman.] A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay only with the broken meet, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift.

CHA'RACTER, n. s. [character, Lat. χαρακτὴρ]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation.

In outward also her resembling less
His image, who made both; and less expressing
The character of that dominion giv'n
O'er other creatures. Paradise Lost.

2. A letter used in writing or printing.

But his neat cookery!——
He cut our roots in characters. Shakesp.
The purpose is perspicuous, even as substance
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakesp.
It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. The hand or manner of writing.

I found the letter thrown in at the casement of my closet. You know the character to be your brother's. Shakesp.

4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.

Each drew fair characters, yet none
Of these they feign'd excels their own. Denham.
Homer has excelled all the heroick poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity. Addison.

5. An account of any thing as good or bad.

This subterraneous passage is much mended, since Seneca gave so bad a character of it. Addison on Italy.

6. The person with his assemblage of qualities; a personage.

In a tragedy, or epick poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outshine the rest of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets. Dryden.

7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.

Nothing so true as what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all. Pope.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.

The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions. Atterbury.

To CHA'RACTER, v. a. [from the noun.] To inscribe; to engrave. It seems to have had the accent formerly on the second syllable.

These few precepts in thy memory
See thou character. Shakesp.
Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin. Shak.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character. Shak.
The pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage,
Character'd in the face. Milton.

CHARACTERI'STICAL, adj. [from characterize.] That which constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which I have yet not ventured to prefix that characteristick distinction. Woodward on Fossils.

The shining quality of an epick hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristical virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration. Dryden.

CHARACTERI'STICALNESS, n. s. [from characteristical.] The quality of being peculiar to a character; marking a character.

CHARACTERI'STICK, n. s. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

This vast invention exerts itself in Homer, in a manner superior to that of any poet; it is the great and peculiar characteristick which distinguishes him from all others. Pope.

CHARACTERI'STICK of a Logarithm. The same with the index or exponent.

To CHA'RACTERIZE, v. a. [from character.]

1. To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.

It is some commendation, that we have avoided publicly to characterize any person, without long experience. Swift.

2. To engrave or imprint.

They may be called anticipations, prenotions, or sentiments characterized and engraven in the soul, born with it, and growing up with it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To mark with a particular stamp or token.

There are faces not only individual, but gentilitious and national; European, Asiatick, Chinese, African, and Grecian faces are characterised. Arbuthnot on Air.

CHA'RACTERLESS, adj. [from character.] Without a character.

When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakesp.

CHARACTERY, n. s. [from character.] Impression; mark; distinction: accented anciently on the second syllable.

Fairies use flowers for their charactery. Shakesp.
All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the charactery of my sad brows. Shakesp.

CHARCOAL, n. s. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from char business; but, by Mr. Lye, from To chark to burn.] Coal made by burning wood under turf. It is used in preparing metals.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal; and charcoal of roots, being coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Love is a fire that burns and sparkles
In men as nat'rally as in charcoals,
Which sooty chymists stop in holes,
When out of wood they extract coals. Hudibras.
Is there who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls,
With desp'rate charcoal round his darken'd walls? Pope

CHARD, n. s. [charde, French.]

1. Chards of artichokes, are the leaves of fair artichoke plants, tied and wrapped up all over but the top, in straw, during the autumn and winter; this makes them grow white, and lose some of their bitterness. Chambers.

2. Chards of beet, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large, white thick, downy, and cotton-like main shoot, which is the true chard. Mortimer.

To CHARGE, v. a. [charger, Fr. caricare, Ital. from carrus, Lat.]

1. To entrust; to commission for a certain purpose: it has with before the thing entrusted.

And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them. Genesis.
What you have charged me with, that I have done. Shakesp.

2. To impute as a debt; with on before the debtor.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:
That's somewhat sure; a mighty sum of murder,
Of innocent and kindred blood struck off:
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of Heav'n to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

3. To impute: with on before the person to whom any thing is imputed.

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time. Dryden.
It is easy to account for the difficulties he charges on the peripatetick doctrine. Locke.
It is not barely the ploughman's pains; the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat; the plough, mill, oven, or any other utensils, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.
Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.
We charge that upon necessity, which was really desired and chosen. Watts's Logick.

4. To impute to, as cost or hazard.

He was so great an encourager of commerce, that he charged himself with all the sea risk of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in winter. Arbuthnot on Coins.

5. To impose as a task; it has with before the thing imposed.

The gospel chargeth us with piety towards God, and justice and charity to men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves. Tillotson.

6. To accuse; to censure.

Speaking thus to you, I am so far from charging you as guilty in this matter, that I can sincerely say, I believe the exhortation wholly needless. Wake's Preparation for Death.

A large dish.

All the tributes land and sea affords,
Heap'd in great chargers load our sumptuous boards. Denham

This golden charger, snatch'd from burning Troy,
Anchises did in sacrifice employ. Dryd. Æneid.

Ev'n Lamb himself, at the most solemn feast,
Might have some chargers not exactly dress'd. King

Nor dare they close their eyes,
Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry-furr'd tongues. Philips.

CHA'RILY, adv. [from chary.] Warily; frugally.

What paper do you take up so charily? Shakesp.

CHA'RINESS, n. s. [from chary.] Caution; nicety; scrupulousness.

I will consent to act any villany against him, that may not sully the chariness of your honesty. Shakesp.

CHA'RIOT, n. s. [car-rhod, Welsh, a wheeled car; for it is known the Britons fought in such; charriot, Fr. carretta, Ital.]

1. A wheel carriage of pleasure or state; a vehicle for men rather than wares.

Thy grand captain Antony
Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head. Shakesp.

2. A car in which men of arms were anciently placed.

He skims the liquid plains,
High on his chariot, and with loosen'd reins
Majestick moves along. Dryden's Æneid.

3. A lighter kind of coach, with only front seats.

To CHA'RIOT, v. a. [from the noun,] To convey in a chariot. This word is rarely used.

An angel all in flames ascended,
As in a fiery column charioting,
His godlike presence. Milton's Sampson Agonistes.

CHA'RIOTEER, n. s. [from chariot.] He that drives the chariot. It is used only in speaking of military chariots, and those in the ancient public games.

The gasping charioteer beneath the wheel
Of his own car. Dryden's Fables.

The burning chariot, and the charioteer,
In bright Bootes and his wane appear.
Addison on Italy.

Show us the youthful handsome charioteer,
Firm in his seat, and running his career. Prior.

CHARIOT RACE, n. s. [from chariot and race.] A sport anciently used, where chariots were driven for the prize, as now horses run.

There is a wonderful vigour and spirit in the description of the horse and chariot race. Addison.

CHA'RITABLE, adj. [charitable, Fr. from charité.]

1. Kind in giving alms; liberal to the poor.

He that hinders a charitable person from giving alms to a poor man, is tied to restitution, if he hindered him by fraud or violence. Taylor's Holy Liv.

Shortly thou wilt behold me poor, and kneeling
Before thy charitable door for bread. Rowe.

How shall we then wish, that it might be allowed us to live over our lives again, in order to fill every minute of them with charitable offices! Atterbury.

Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears: what his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies. Pope.

2. Kind in judging of others; disposed to tenderness; benevolent.

How had you been my friends else? Why have you that charitable title from thousands, did you not chiefly belong to my heart? Shakesp. Timon.

Of a politick sermon that had no divinity, the king said to Bishop Andrews, Call you this a sermon? The bishop answered, By a charitable construction it may be a sermon. Bacon.

CHA'RITABLY, adv. [from charity.]

1. Kindly; liberally; with inclination to help the poor.

2. Benevolently; without malignity.

'Tis best sometimes your censure to restrain,
And charitably let the dull be vain. Pope.

CHA'RITY, n. s. [charité, Fr. caritas, Lat.]

1. Tenderness; kindness; love.

By thee,
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
Milton.

2. Goodwill; benevolence; disposition to think well of others.

My errours, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind; and such as my own charity has caused me to commit, that of others may more easily excuse. Dryden.

3. The theological virtue of universal love.

Concerning charity, the final object whereof is that incomprehensible beauty which shineth in the countenance of Christ, the Son of the living God. Hooker.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.—
—Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt. Shakesp.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love,
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his excellencies and mercies. Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway,
Nor bound by time, nor subject to decay,
In happy triumph shall for ever live. Prior.

Charity, or a love of God which works by a love of our neighbour, is greater than faith or hope. Atterbury.

4. Liberality to the poor.

The heathen poet, in commending the charity of Dido to the Trojans, spoke like a Christian. Dryd.

5. Alms; relief given to the poor.

We must incline to the king; I will look for him, and privily relieve him; go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. Shakesp.

The ant did well to reprove the grasshopper for her slothfulness; but she did ill then to refuse her a charity in her distress. L'Estrange.

I never had the confidence to beg a charity
Dryden.

To CHARK, v. a. To burn to a black cinder, as wood is burned to make charcoal.

Excess either with an apoplexy knocks a man on the head, or with a fever, like fire in a strong water shop, burns him down to the ground; or, if it flames not out, charks him to a coal.
Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

CHA'RLATAN, n. s. [charlatan, Fr. ciarlatano, Ital. from ciarlare to chatter.] A quack; a mountebank; an empirick.

Saltimbanchoes, quacksalvers, and charlatans, deceive them in lower degrees. Brown's Vulg. Err.

For charlatans can do no good,
Until they're mounted in a crowd. Hudibras.

CHARM, n. s. [charme, Fr. carmen, Latin.]

1. Words, or philtres, or characters, imagined to have some occult or unintelligible power.

I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely I think you have charms.——Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shakesp.

There have been used, either barbarous words, of no sense, lest they should disturb the imagination; or words of similitude, that may second and feed the imagination; and this was ever as well in heathen charms, as in charms of later times. Bacon.

Alcyone he names amidst his prayers,
Names as a charm against the waves and wind,
Most in his mouth, and ever in his mind. Dryden.

Antæus could, by magick charms,
Recover strength whene'er he fell. Swift.

2. Something of power to subdue opposition, and gain the affections; something that can please irresistibly.

Well sounding verses are the charm we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to infuse. Roscommon.

Nor ever hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prior.

To fam'd Apelles when young Amnon brought
The darling idol of his captive heart;
And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,
To have her charms recorded by his art. Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Addison.

To CHARM, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fortify with charms against evil.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born. Shakesp.

2. To make powerful by charms.

3. To summon by incantation.

Upon my knees
I charm you by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one. Shakesp.

4. To subdue by some secret power: to amaze; to overpower.

I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did hear him groan;
Nor feel him where he struck. Shak.

Musick the fiercest grief can charm. Pope.

5. To subdue the mind by pleasure.

'Tis your graces
That from my mutest conscience to my tongue
Charms this report out. Shakesp.

Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie:
Where the power that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller.

Charm by accepting, by submitting sway. Pope.

Chloe thus the soul alarm'd,
Aw'd without sense, and without beauty charm'd.
Pope.

CHARMED, adj. Enchanted.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.

We implore thy powerful hand,
To undo the charmed band
Of true virgin here distressed. Milton.

CHA'RMER, n. s. [from charm.]

1. One that has the power of charms or enchantments.

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people. Shakesp.

The passion you pretended,
Was only to obtain;
But when the charm is ended,
The charmer you disdain. Dryden.

2. Word of endearment among lovers.

CHA'RMING, particip. adj. [from charm.] Pleasing in the highest degree.

For ever all goodness will be charming, for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Spratt.

O charming youth! in the first op'ning page,
So many graces in so green an age. Dryden.

CHA'RMINGLY, adv. [from charming.] In such a manner as to please exceedingly.

She smiled very charmingly, and discovered as fine a set of teeth as ever eye beheld. Addison.

CHA'RMINGNESS, n. s. [from charming] The power of pleasing.

CHA'RNEL, adj. [charnel, Fr.] Containing flesh or carcasses.

Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp,
Oft found in charnel vaults and sepulchres
Ling'ring, and sitting by a new-made grave. Milt.

CHA'RNEL-HOUSE, n. s. [charnier, Fr. from caro, carnis, Latin.] The place under churches where the bones of the dead are reposited.

If charnel-houses and our graves must send
Those that we bury back; our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. Shakesp.

When they were in those charnel-houses, every one was placed in order, and a black pillar or coffin set by him. Taylor.

CHART, n. s. [charta, Lat.] A delineation or map of coasts, for the use of sailors. It is distinguished from a map, by representing only the coasts.

The Portuguese, when they had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, found skilful pilots, using astronomical instruments, geographical charts, and compasses. Arbuthnot.

CHA'RTER, n. s. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick; as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empanelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Cowell.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter and your city's freedom. Shak.

It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation.
Raleigh's Essays.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denham.

She shakes the rubbish from her mounting brow,
And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
Which heav'n will to the death of time allow.
Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty
Withal as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
And they that are most galled with my folly,
They most must laugh. Shakesp.

My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakesp.

CHA'RTER-PARTY, n. s. [chartre partie, Fr.] A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHA'RTERED, adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakesp.

CHARY, adj. [from care.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion so required Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shakesp.

To CHASE, v. a. [chasser, Fr.]

1. To hunt.

It shall be as the chased roe. Isaiah.
Mine enemies chased me sore, like a bird. Lamentations.

And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him. Judges.
One of you shall chase a thousand. Deuteronomy.

3. To drive away.

He that chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.

Thus chased by their brother's endless malice from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Bisennis. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
When the following morn had chas'd away
The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryd.

To chase Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was hastening in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady. Shakesp.
There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Fitness to be hunted; appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakesp.
A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,
Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.
He sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
They seek that joy, which us'd to glow
Expanded on the hero's face,
When the thick squadrons prest the foe,
And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursued,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden's Juvenal.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Sidney.
Hold! Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must put this deer to death. Shak.
Honour's the noblest chase, pursue that game,
And recompense the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot: and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cowell.
He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shak.

8. The Chase of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside. Chambers.

CHASE-GUN, n. s. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Meantime the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHA'SER. n. s. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began
A stop i' th' chaser, a retire; anon
A rout, confusion thick. Shakesp.
So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denham.
Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey!
Lo, Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart,
Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart. Pope.

2. An enchaser.

CHASM, n. s. [χάσμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no chasms or gaps. Locke.
The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.
The ground adust her riv'n mouth disparts,
Horrible chasm! profound. Philips.

2. A place unfilled; a vacuity.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such, whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

CHASSELAS, n. s. [French.] A sort of grape.

CHASTE, adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.]

1. Pure from all commerce of sexes; as, a chaste virgin.

Diana chaste, and Hebe fair. Prior.

2. With respect to language, pure; uncorrupt; not mixed with barbarous phrases.

3. Free from obscenity.

To CHA'STEN, v. a. [chastier, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Proverbs.
I follow thee, safe guide! the path
Thou lead'st me! and to the hand of heav'n submit,
However chastening. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Some feel the rod,
And own, like us, the father's chast'ning hand. Roue
From our lost pursuit she wills to hide
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride Prior.

To CHASTISE, v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last.]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakesp.
I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.
Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra
Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,
He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakesp.
Know, Sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavius. Shakesp.
The gay social sense
By decency chastised. Thomson.

CHASTISEMENT, n. s. [chastiment, Fr.] Correction; punishment: commonly, though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shakesp
He held the chastisement of one, which molested the see of Rome, pleasing to God. Raleigh's Essays.
For seven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying or ill-natured tricks? the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.
He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHASTI'SER, n. s. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

CHA'STELY, adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here; no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Shakesp.
Make first a song of joy and love,
Which chastely flame in royal eyes. Wotton.
Succession of a long descent,
Which chastely in the channels ran,
And from our demi-gods began. Dryden.

CHA'STITY, n. s. [castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To force a spotless virgin's chastity. Shakesp.
Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows: continence, of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God. Taylor.
Ev'n here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,
Without offence to utter them. Shak. Much Ado.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.

CHA'STENESS, n. s. [from chaste.] Chastity; purity.

To CHAT, v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.]

To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,
Ylike as a monster of many heads. Spenser
Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love. Shakesp.
The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chatting in a rustick row. Milton.
With much good-will the motion was embrac'd,
To chat awhile on their adventures pass'd. Dryd.

To CHAT, v. a. To talk of. Not in use; unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him. Shakesp.

CHAT, n. s. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords, that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo, I myself would make
A chough of as deep chat. Shakesp.
The time between before the fire they sat,
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat. Dryden.
The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club. Locke.
Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that. Pope.

CHAT, n. s. The keys of trees are called chats; as, ash chats.

CHA'TTEL, n. s. [See CATTLE.] Any moveable possession; a term scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;
I will be master of what is mine own;
She is my goods, my chattels. Shakesp.
Honour's a lease for lives to come,
And cannot be extended from
The legal tenant; 'tis a chattle
Not to be forfeited in battle. Hudibras.

To CHA'TTER, v. n. [caqueter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pie, or other unharmonious bird.

Nightingales seldom sing, the pie still chattereth. Sidney.
So doth the cuckow, when the mavis sings,
Begin his witless note apace to chatter. Spenser.
There was a crow sat chattering upon the back of a sheep: Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog L'Estrange.
Your birds of knowledge, that in dusky air
Chatter futurity. Dryden.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth.

Stood Theodore surpris'd in deadly fright,
With chatt'ring teeth, and bristling hair upright. Dryden.
Dip but your toes into cold water,
Their correspondent teeth will chatter. Prior.

3. To talk idly or carelessly.

Suffer no hour to pass away in a lazy idleness, an impertinent chattering, or useless trifles. Watts's Logick.

CHA'TTER, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Noise like that of a pie or monkey.

The mimick ape began his chatter,
How evil tongues his life bespatter. Swift.

2. Idle prate.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd of man's fair proportion;
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakesp.

CHEAT, n. s. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from escheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manours in procuring escheats, cheat, the abridgment, was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it. Temple.
Empirick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.
When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit:
Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lyes worse; and while it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, cuts off what we possest. Dryden.

2. A person guilty of fraud.

Dissimulation can be no farther useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. South.
Like that notorious cheat, vast sums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryden.

CHE'SS-PLAYER. n. s. [from chess and player.] A gamester at chess.

Thus, like a skilful chess-player, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons. Dryden.

CHE'SSOM. n. s. Mellow earth.

The tender chessom and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not loomy and binding. Bacon's Nat. History.

CHEST. n. s. [cyꝛꝛ, Sax. cista, Lat.]

1. A box of wood, or other materials in which things are laid up.

He will seek there, on my word: neither press, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakesp.

But more have been by avarice oppress,
And heaps of money crowded in the chest. Dryden.

2. A Chest of Drawers. A case with moveable boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.

Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks. Brown.

He describes another by the largeness of his chest, and breadth of his shoulders. Pope's Notes on the Iliad.

To CHEST. v. a. [from the noun] To reposite in a chest; to hoard.

CHEST-FOUNDERING. n. s. A disease in horses. It comes near to a pleurisy, or peripneumony, in a human body. Farrier's Dictionary.

CHE'STED. adj. [from chest.] Having a chest; as, broad-chested, narrow-chested.

CHE'STER. See CASTOR.

CHE'STNUT. } n. s. chastaigne, Fr.
CHE'STNUT-TREE. } castanea, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakesp.

October has a basket of services, medlars, and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour ——
——An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakesp.

Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown. Cowley

CHE'STON. n. s. A species of plum.

CHEVALI'ER. n. s. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid
And I am lowted by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakesp.

CHEVAUX de Frise. n. s. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tourniquet. Chambers.

CHE'VEN. n. s. [chevesne, Fr.] A river fish, the same with chub.

CHE'VERIL. n. s. [cheverau, Fr.] A kid; kidleather. Obsolete.

A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakesp.

Which gifts the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakesp.

O, here 's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shakesp.

CHEVISANCE. n. s. [chevisance, Fr.] Enterprise; a chievement. A word now not in use.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance,
Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spenser.

CHEVRON. n. s. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harris.

To CHEW. v. a. [ceopyan, Sax. kauwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us? Shakesp.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shak.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh, of lambs. Dryden's Fables

The vales
Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chews verd'rous pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arb. on Ali.

2. To meditate; or ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:
Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heaven 's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew its name. Shakesp.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shak.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon 't. L'Estrange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICA'NE. n. s. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICA'NE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICA'NER. n. s. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophister; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICA'NERY. n. s. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports, and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbuthnot.

CHICHES. n. s. See CHICKPEAS.

CHI'CHLING VETCH. n. s. [lathyrus, Lat.] In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. Miller.

CHICK. } n. s. [cicen, Sax. kiecken,
CHI'CKEN. } Dutch. Chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop! Shakesp.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Hale.

Even since she was a se'en-night old, they say,
Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
Nor chuck, nor hen, was known to disobey.
Dryden's Fables.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine:
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick,
This is thy charge. Shakesp.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints, that Stella is no chicken. Swift.

CHI'CKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,
Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,
To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.
Prologue to Spanish Fryar.

CHI'CKENPOX. n. s. An exanthematous distemper, so called, from its being of no very great danger.

CHI'CKLING. n. s. [from chick.] A small chicken.

CHI'CKPEAS. n. s. [from chick and pea.] A kind of degenerate pea. Miller.

CHI'CKWEED. n. s. [from chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are of good use in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk Wiseman.

To CHIDE. v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden. [cidan, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth.
Shakesp.

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove. Shak.

Those, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;
He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding. Shakesp.

Scylla wept
And chid her barking waves into attention. Milt.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race.
Waller.

You look, as if you stern philosopher
Had just now chid you. Addison.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle. Shakesp

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,
And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay.
Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste,
For, the work perfected, the joy was past. Prior.

To CHIDE. v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

What had he to do to chide at me? Shakesp.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:
The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shakesp.

3. To make a noise.

My duty
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shakesp.

CHI'DER. n. s. [from chide.] A rebuker; a reprover.

Not her that chides, Sir, at any hand, I pray —
I love no chiders, Sir. Shakesp.

CHIEF. adj. [chef the head, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works. 1 Kings

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. Ezra.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend. Pope.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth chief friends. Proverbs

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think, improperly; the comparative chiefer is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son. Shak.

Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen.
1 Samuel.

He so netimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies; a captain.

Is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they
Less hardy to endure? courageous chief!
The first in flight from pain. Milton's Par. Lost.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Dryd.

A wit 's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man 's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In Chief, in law. In capite, by personal service.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

I shall be proud to hold my dependence on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire. Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?
The coloured chaplets wrought with a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary? Spens.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon. Peacham on Drawing.

CHI'EFDOM. n. s. [from chief.] Sovereignty. Not in use.

Zephyrus being in love with Chloris, and coveting her to wife, gave her for a dowry the chiefdom and sovereignty of all flowers and green herbs. Spenser's Kal. Gloss.

CHIE'FLESS. adj. [from chief.] Wanting a head; being without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for order on the main. Pope.

CHI'EFLY. adv [from chief.] Principally; eminently; more than common.

Any man who will consider the nature of an epic poem, what actions it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty. Dryden.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay. Swift.

CHI'EFRIE. n. s. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefrie, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons. Spenser's Ireland.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie? Swift.

CHI'EFTAIN. n. s. [from chief captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake,
(Their chieftain Humber named was aright)
Unto the mighty stream him to betake,
Where he an end of battle and of life did make Fairy Queen.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry. Davies on Ireland.

CHIE'VANCE. n. s. [probably from achevance, Fr. purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chievances and exchanges, which is bastard usury. Bacon

CHI'LBLAIN. n s. [from chill cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of childblains when I was a boy (which may be called the children's gout), by burning at the fire. Temple.

CHILD. n. s. in the plural CHILDREN. [cilb, Sax.]

1. An infant, or very young person.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain,
As for a youth to turn a child again. Denham.

We should no more be kinder to one child than to another, than we are tender of one eye more than of the other. L'Estrange.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen. Locke.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Wake.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration, thereupon. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakesp.

So unexhausted her perfections were,
That for more children she had more to spare. Dryden.

He, in a fruitful wife's embraces old,
A long increase of children's children told. Addison.

3. The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

4. In the language of scripture.

One weak in knowledge. Isaiah. 1 Corinth.
Such as are young in grace. 1 John.
Such as are humble and docile. Matthew.

The children of light, the children of darkness; who follow light, who remain in darkness.

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints! Wisdom.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ. Gal. iii. 26. Calmet.

5. A girl child. Not in use.

Mercy on 's! a bearne, a very pretty bearne!
A boy, or child, I wonder? Shakesp.

6. Any thing the product or effect of another.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples. Shakesp.

7. To be with Child. To be pregnant.

If it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crost. Shak.

To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring, the summer,
The childing autumn, angry winter, change
Their wonted liveries. Shakesp.

As to childing women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hæmorrhages. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LDBEARING. participial substantive. [from child and bear.] The act of bearing children.

To thee
Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
And, bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy,
Fruit of thy womb. Milton's Par. Lost.

The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred till she is past childbearing. Addison.

CHI'LDBED. n. s. [from child and bed.] The state of a woman bringing a child, or being in labour.

The funerals of prince Arthur, and of queen Elizabeth, who died in childbed in the Tower. Bacon.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of childbed stain. Paradise Regained.

Yet these, tho' poor, the pain of childbed bear. Dryden.

Let no one be actually married, till she hath the childbed pillows. Spectator.

Women in childbed are in the case of persons wounded. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CHI'LDBIRTH. n. s. [from child and birth.] Travail; labour; the time of bringing forth; the act of bringing forth.

The mother of Pyrocles, after her childbirth, died. Sidney.

A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travailing in childbirth. Carew's Survey.

In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the sharpest pains of childbirth; to shew, that there is no state exempt from sorrow. Taylor's Holy Living.

He to his wife, before the time assign'd
For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind. Dryden.

CHI'LDED. adj. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;
He childed as I father'd. Shakesp.

CHI'LDERMAS DAY. [from child and mass.] The day of the week, throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the Holy Innocents is solemnized, which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

To talk of hares, or such uncouth things, proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when childermas day fell, doth to the mariner. Carew.

CHI'LDHOOD. n. s. [from child; cilbhab, Sax.]

1. The state of children; or, the time in which we are children: it includes infancy, but is continued to puberty.

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood, remov'd but little from our own. Shakesp.

The sons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhoods. Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I ceas'd to eye
Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth. Milt.

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life, has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiours. Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden.

CHI'LDISH. adj. [from child.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling; ignorant; simple.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childish: then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile. Bacon's Essays.

2. Becoming only children; trifling; puerile.

Musidorus being elder by three or four years, there was taken away the occasion of childish contentions. Sidney.

The lion's whelps she saw how he did bear,
And lull in rugged arms withouten childish fear. Spenser.

When I was yet a child, no childish play
To me was pleasing; all my mind was set
Serious to learn and know. Paradise Regained.

The fathers looked on the worship of images as the most silly and childish thing in the world. Stillingfleet.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go
Loves childish plays. Roscommon.

They have spoiled the walls with childish sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words. Addison on Italy.

By conversation the childish humours of their younger days might be worn out. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

CHI'LDISHLY. adv. [from childish.] In a childish trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly ejected him. Hooker.

Some men are of excellent judgment in their own professions, but childishly unskilful in any thing besides. Hayward.

CHI'LDISHNESS. n. s. [from childish.]

1. Puerility; triflingness.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform. Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholick religion. Addison on Italy.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more
Than can our reasons. Shakesp.

CHI'LDLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. 1 Samuel.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed; so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. Bacon's Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton's Paradise Lost.

She can give the reason why one died childless. Spectator

CHI'LDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or beseeming a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker.

Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty. Shakesp.

CHI'LIAD. n. s. [from χιλιας.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years, as decads, centuries, chiliads, for the use of computation in history. Holder.

CHILIA'EDRON. n. s. [from χιλια.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHILIFA'CTIVE. adj. [from chile.] That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chilifactive mutation, or alimental conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CHILIFA'CTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather reply upon a chilifactory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICA'TION. n. s. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostriche; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chilification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.
   And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
   Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill.
   Milton.
2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.
   My heart and my chill veins freeze with despair.
   Rowe.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. s. [from the adjective.] Chilness; cold.
   I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his præcordia and head. Derham's Physico-Theology.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.
   Age has not yet
   So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,
   But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryd.
   Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams,
   And vex the world with opposite extremes.
   Creech.
   Each changing season does its poison bring;
   Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring.
   Prior.
   Now no more the drum
   Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill
   Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood.
   Philips.
2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.
   Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors which he cannot bear. Rogers.
3. To blast with cold.
   The fruits perish on the ground,
   Or soon decay, by snows immod'rate chill'd,
   By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd.
   Blackmore.

CHI'LLINESS. n. s. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.
   If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chillness or shivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.
   A chilly sweat bedews
   My shudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHI'LNESS. n. s. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.
   If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chilness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.
   This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
   A generous chilness seizes ev'ry part,
   The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIMB n. s. [kime, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. s. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minshew suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churm, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.]

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.
   Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;
   That, as we do strike a tune,
   In our dance shall make a chime. Ben Jonson.
   The sound
   Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
   Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton's Par. Lost
   Love virtue, she alone is free;
   She can teach you how to climb
   Higher than the sphery chime. Milton.
2. The correspondence of sound.
   Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhime,
   The motion measur'd, harmonis'd the chime. Dryd.
3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.
   We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakesp.
4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.
   The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned.
   Grew's Cosmologia.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.
   To make the rough recital aptly chime,
   Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhime,
   'Tis mighty hard. Prior.
2. To correspond in relation or proportion.
   Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.
3. To agree; to fall in with.
   He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse.
   Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.
4. To suit with; to agree.
   Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me. Locke.
5. To jingle; to clatter.
   But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
   And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhime.
   Smith.

To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonancy.
   With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
   And chime their sounding hammers in a row;
   With labour'd anvils Ætna groans below.
   Dryden's Georgicks.
2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMÆRA. n. s. [chimæra, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical Chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.
   In short, the force of dreams is of a piece,
   Chimeras all, and more absurd, or less. Dryd. Fab.
   No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIME'RICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.
   Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIME'RICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

CHI'MINAGE. n. s. [from chimin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest. Cowell.

CHI'MNEY. n. s. [cheminée, Fr.]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.
   Chimnies with scorn rejecting smoke. Swift.
2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.
   The night has been unruly: where we lay,
   Our chimnies were blown down. Shakesp.
3. The fire-place.
   The chimney
   Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece,
   Chaste Dian bathing. Shakesp.
   The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney.
   Raleigh's History.
   Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Test.

CHI'MNEY-CORNER. n. s. [from chimney and corner.] The fire-side; the seat on each end of the firegrate: usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.
   Yet some old men
   Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

CHI'MNEYPIECE. n. s. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fire-place.
   Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in grease. Swift.

CHI'MNEYSWEEPER. n. s. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.
   To look like her, are chimneysweepers black;
   And since her time are colliers counted bright.
   Shakesp.
   The little chimneysweeper skulks along,
   And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng.
   Gay.
   Even lying Ned, the chimneysweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims.
   Arbuthnot.
2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.
   Golden lads and girls, all must,
   As chimneysweepers, come to dust. Shakesp.

CHIN. n. s. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.
   But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her waist, and thrusting out her chin. Sidney.
   With his Amazonian chin he drove
   The bristled lips before him. Shakesp.
   He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,
   And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin.
   Dryden.

CHI'NA. n. s. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.
   Spleen, vapours, or small-pox, above them all;
   And mistress of herself, tho' china fall. Pope.
   After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket. Swift.

CHI'NA-ORANGE. n. s. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange: brought originally from China.
   Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer's Husb.

CHI'NA-ROOT. n. s. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHI'NCOUGH. n. s. [perhaps more properly kincough, from kinckin to pant, Dut and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.
   I have observed a chincough, complicated with an intermitting fever. Floyer on the Humours.

CHINE. n. s. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina, Lat. orin, Arm.]

1. The part of the back in which the spine or back bone is found.

She strake him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body. Sidney.

He presents her with the tusky head,
And chine with rising bristles roughly spread. Dryd.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep. Shakesp.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally among his neighbours. Spectator.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines.

He that in his line did chine the long ribb'd Apennine. Dryden.

CHINK. n. s. [cinan to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisbe did talk through the chink of a wall. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Plagues also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they so contract the chink of their larinx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry indigested. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabrick. South.

In vain she search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouse. Swift.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state:
With ready quills the dedicators wait. Pope's Dunciad.

To CHINK. v. n. To sound by striking each other.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks as well, as 'squire South's. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards. Swift.

CHI'NKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chinky hives with clay. Dryden's Virgil.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Philips's Poems.

CHINTS. n. s. Cloth of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face. Pope.

CHI'OPPINE. n. s. [from chapin, Span.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chiopine. Shakesp.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chioppines. Cowley.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Saxon cyppan ceapan, to buy. Gibson.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

His mangled Myrmidons,
Noseless, handless, hackt and chipt, come to him,
Crying on Hector. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

To return to our statue in the block of marble, we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped; sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure. Addison's Spectator.

The critick strikes out all that is not just;
And 'tis ev'n so the butler chips his crust. King.

Industry
Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone. Thomson.

CHIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips forbiddeth. Bacon.

That chip made iron swim, not by natural power. Taylor.

The straw was laid below;
Of chips and serewood was the second row. Dryden's Fables.

2. A small piece, however made.

The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, spar, and chips of stone. Woodward.

CHI'PPING. n. s. [from To chip] A fragment cut off.

They dung their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Classicks.

CHIRA'GRICAL. adj. [from chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragrical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CHIRO'GRAPHER. n. s. [χείρ the hand, and γράφω to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer's, to be engrossed. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

CHIRO'GRAPHIST. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes by examining the hand; the true word is chirosophist, or chiromancer.

Let the phisiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CHIRO'GRAPHY. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHI'ROMANCER. n. s. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretels future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,
To chiromancers' cheaper art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Juvenal.

CHI'ROMANCY. n. s. [χείρ the hand, and μαντις a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy, that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up. The Dutch have circken.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
Till hard by them both he and she did stay. Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived sound? Shak.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes. Gay's Pastorals.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson's Spring.

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johnson

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

CHIRP. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet. Spectator.

CHI'RPER. n. s. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceorpian, Sax.] See CHURME. To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHI'RURGEON. n. s. [χειρουργὸς, from χεὶρ the hand, and ἔργον work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgeon. South's Sermons.

CHIRU'RGERY. n. s. [from chirurgeon.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called surgery.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wiseman.

CHIRU'RGICAL. } adj. See CHIRUR-
CHIRU'RGICK. } GEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Wilkins.

CHI'SEL. n. s. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her. Shakesp.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil. Wotton's Architecture.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHI'SEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. s. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jest. Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A freckle. [from chick-pease] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT. v.n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHI'TCHAT. n. s. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club. Spectator.

CHI'TTERLINGS. n. s. without singular. [from schyter lingh, Dut. Minshew; from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHI'TTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHI'VALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Q.

CHI'VALRY. n. s. [chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval a horse; as eques in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon's Essays.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as, valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakesp.
I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakesp.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,
That, by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,
And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not now in use.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalries. Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.

And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakesp.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services, as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military, the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord: and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called sergeantry; and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called scutagium. Cowell

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.

CHI'VES. n. s. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers with seeds at the end.

The masculine or prolific seed contained in the chives or apices of the stamina. Ray on the Creation.

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.

CHLORO'SIS. n. s. [from χλώρος green.] The green-sickness.

To CHOAK. See CHOKE.

CHO'COLATE. n. s. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cocao tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalements arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate. Chambers.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotick liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbuth. on Alim.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below! Pope.

CHO'COLATE-HOUSE. n. s. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Tatler.

CHODE. [the old preterite from chide.] See CHIDE.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban. Genesis.

CHOICE. n. s. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,
The choice is made, for I must both refuse. Dryd.
Soft elocution doth thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryd. Persius.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hooker

There 's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. L'Estrange.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophthegms: it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty;
That you might well enjoy her. Shakesp.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming warriours. Milt. Par. Lost
Now, Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice;
Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genesis.

Their riders, the flow'r and choice
Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milt.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakesp.

7. To make Choice of. To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom of what herself approves makes choice,
Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, he told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus, in a sea of folly toss'd,
My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Used of persons.

He that is choice of his time, will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions. Taylor's Holy Living.

CHO'ICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcileableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

CHO'ICELY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men,
Collected choicely from each county some. Shakesp.

2. Valuably; excellently.

It is certain it is choicely good. Walton's Angler.

CHO'ICENESS. n. s. [from choice.] Nicety; particular value.

Carry into the shade such auriculas, seedlings, or plants, as are for their choiceness reserved in pots. Evelyn's Kalendar.

CHOIR. n. s. [chorus, Lat.]

1. An assembly or band of singers.

They now assist the choir
Of angels, who their songs admire. Waller.

2. The singers in divine worship.

The choir,
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. Shakesp.

3. The part of the church where the choristers or singers are placed.

The lords and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her. Shakesp.

To CHOKE. v a. [aceocan, Sax. from ceoca the cheek or mouth. According to Minshew, from חכ; from whence, probably, the Spanish ahogar.]

1. To suffocate; to kill by stopping the passage of respiration.

But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll choke myself. Shakesp.

While you thunder'd, clouds of dust did choke
Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.

Men troop'd up to the king's capacious court,
Whose porticos were chok'd with the resort. Chapman.

They are at a continual expence to cleanse the ports, and keep them from being choked up, by the help of several engines. Addison on Italy.

While pray'rs and tears his destin'd progress stay,
And crowds of mourners choke their sov'reign's way. Tickell.

3. To hinder by obstruction or confinement.

As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choke their art. Shakesp.

She cannot lose her perfect pow'r to see,
Tho' mists and clouds do choke her window-light. Davies.

It seemeth the fire is so choked, as not to be able to remove the stone. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

You must make the mould big enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatest; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The fire, which chok'd in ashes lay,
A load too heavy for his soul to move,
Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love. Dryden.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd
Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shakesp.

Confess thee freely of thy sin:
For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Shakesp.

5. To overpower.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the rising corn.
Dryden's Past.

If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him. Shakesp.

2. To take; not to refuse.

Let us choose to us judgment; let us know among ourselves what is good. Job.

The will has still so much freedom left as to enable it to choose any act in its kind good; as also to refuse any act in its kind evil. South's Sermons.

3. To select; to pick out of a number.

How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him? Job.

4. To elect for eternal happiness; to predestinate to life. A term of theologians.

To CHOOSE. v. n. To have the power of a choice between different things. It is generally joined with a negative, and signifies must necessarily be.

Without the influence of the Deity supporting things, their utter annihilation could not choose but follow. Hooker.

Knaves abroad,
Who having by their own importunate suit
Convinced or supplied them, they cannot choose,
But they must blab. Shakesp.

When a favourite shall be raised upon the foundation of merit, then can he not choose but prosper. Bacon.

Threw down a golden apple in her way;
For all her haste, she could not choose but stay.
Dryden

Those who are persuaded that they shall continue for ever, cannot choose but aspire after a happiness commensurate to their duration. Tillotson.

CHO'OSER. n. s. [from choose.] He that has the power or office of choosing; elector.

Come all into this nut, quoth she;
Come closely in, be rul'd by me,
Each one may here a chooser be,
For room you need not wrestle. Drayton

In all things to deal with other men, as if I might be my own chooser. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

This generality is not sufficient to make a good chooser, without a more particular contraction of his judgment Wotton.

To CHOP. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, couper. French.]

1. To cut with a quick blow.

What shall we do, if we perceive
Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?
——Chop off his head, man. Shakesp.

If king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I'll undertake to land them on our coast. Shakesp.

CHOUGH. n. s. [ceo, Sax. choucus, Fr.] A bird which frequents the rocks by the sea side, like a jackdaw, but bigger. Hanmer.

In birds, kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks, crows with ravens, daws and choughs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
To crows the like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws, and such republick birds.
Dryden.

CHOULE. n. s. [commonly pronounced and written jowl.] The crop of a bird.

The choule or crop adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so descending by the throat, is a bag or sachel. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To CHOUSE. v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Skinner, who tries to deduce it from the French gosser to laugh at; or joncher to wheedle; and from the Teutonick kosen to prattle. It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.

Freedom and zeal have chous'd you o'er and o'er;
Pray give us leave to bubble you once more.
Dryden.
From London they came, silly people to chouse,
Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

When geese and pullen are seduc'd,
And sows of sucking pigs are chous'd. Hudibras.

CHRO'NICAL. } adj. [from χρόνος time.]
CHRO'NICK }

A chronical distemper is of length; as dropsies, asthmas, and the like. Quincy.

Of diseases some are chronical, and of long duration: as quartane agues, scurvy, wherein we defer the cure unto more advantageous seasons. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The lady's use of these excellencies is to divert the old man when he is out of the pangs of a chronical distemper. Spectator.

CHRO'NICLE. n. s. [chronique, Fr. from χρόνος time.]

1. A register or account of events in order of time.

No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast. Shakesp.

2. A history.

You lean too confidently on those Irish chronicles, which are most fabulous and forged. Spenser on Ireland.

If from the field I should return once more,
I and my sword will earn my chronicle. Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.

I am traduc'd by tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing. Shakesp.

I give up to historians the generals and heroes which croud their annals, together with those which you are to produce for the British chronicle. Dryden.

To CHRO'NICLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

This to rehearse, should rather be to chronicle times than to search into reformation of abuses in that realm. Spenser.

2. To register; to record.

For now the Devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. Shakesp.

Love is your master, for he masters you:
And he that is so yoked by a fool,
Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise. Shak.

I shall be the jest of the town; nay, in two days I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woeful ballad. Congreve.

CHRO'NICLER. n. s. [from chronicle.]

CHURCH. n. s. [cipce, Sax. κυριακη.]

1. The collective body of christians, usually termed the catholick church.

The church, being a supernatural society, doth differ from natural societies in this, that the persons unto whom we associate ourselves in the one, are men, simply considered as men; but they to whom we be joined in the other, are God, angels, and holy men. Hooker.

2. The body of christians adhering to one particular opinion, or form of worship.

The church is a religious assembly, or the large fair building where they meet; and sometimes the same word means a synod of bishops, or of presbyters; and in some places it is the pope and a general council. Watts's Logick.

3. The place which christians consecrate to the worship of God.

It comprehends the whole church, viz. the nave, or body of the church, together with the chancel, which is even included under the word church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

That churches were consecrated unto none but the Lord only, the very general name chiefly doth sufficiently shew: church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house. Hooker.

Tho' you unty the winds, and let them fight Against the churches. Shakesp.

4. It is used frequently in conjunction with other words; as church-member, the members of a church; church-power, spiritual or ecclesiastical authority.

To CHURCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform with any one the office of returning thanks in the church after any signal deliverance, as from the danger of childbirth.

CHURCH-ALE. n. s. [from church and ale.] A wake, or feast, commemoratory of the dedication of the church.

For the church ale, two young men of the parish are yearly chosen to be wardens, who make collection among the parishioners of what provision it pleaseth them to bestow. Carew.

CHURCH-ATTIRE. n. s. The habit in which men officiate at divine service.

These and such like were their discourses, touching that church-attire, which with us, for the most part, is used in publick prayer. Hooker.

CHURCH-AUTHORITY. n. s. Ecclesiastical power; spiritual jurisdiction.

In this point of church-authority, I have sifted all the little scraps alleged. Atterbury.

CHURCH-BURIAL. n. s. Burial according to the rites of the church.

The bishop has the care of seeing that all christians, after their deaths, be not denied church-burial, according to the usage and custom of the place. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHURCH-FOUNDER. n. s. He that builds or endows churches.

Whether emperors or bishops in those days were church-founders, the solemn dedication of churches they thought not to be a work in itself either vain or superstitious. Hooker.

CHURCHMAN. n. s. [church and man.]

1. An ecclesiastick; a clergyman; one that ministers in sacred things.

If any thing be offered to you, touching the church and church-men, or church-government, rely not only upon yourself. Bacon.

A very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and that was so ill filled by many weak and more wilful churchmen. Clarendon.

Patience in want, and poverty of mind,
These marks of church and churchmen he design'd,
And living taught, and dying left behind.
Dryden's Fables.

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH-WARDENS. n. s. [See WARDEN.] Officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, churchyard, and such things as belong to both: and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish. Cowell.

There should likewise, church-wardens of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England. Spenser.

Our church-wardens
Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

CHURCH-YARD. n. s. The ground adjoining the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the church-yard, yet I will adventure. Shakesp.

In churchyards where they bury much, the earth will consume the corps in far shorter time than other earth will. Bacon.

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd;
Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's church-yard. Pope.

CHURL. n. s. [ceopl, Sax. carl, in German, is strong, rusticks being always observed to be strong bodied.]

1. A rustick; a countryman; a labourer.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work or use any hard labour, which he saith is the life of a peasant or churl. Spenser's State of Ireland.

One of the baser sort, which they call churls, being reproved for his oath, answered confidently, that his lord commanded him. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Churl, upon thy eyes I throw
All the pow'r this charm doth owe. Shakesp.

From this light cause th' infernal maid prepares
The country churls to mischief, hate, and wars. Dryden.

2. A rude, surly, ill-bred man.

A churl's courtesy rarely comes, but either for gain or falsehood. Sidney.

3. A miser; a niggard; a selfish or greedy wretch.

Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end!
O churl, drink all, and leave no friendly drop
To help me after! Shakesp.

CHU'RLISH. adj. [from churl.]

1. Rude; brutal; harsh; austere; sour; merciless; unkind; uncivil.

A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears,
Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd. Shakesp.

The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance; they are at hand
To parly or to fight. Shakesp.

A lion in love with a lass, desired her father's consent. The answer was churlish enough: He'd never marry his daughter to a brute. L'Estrange.

He the pursuit of churlish beasts
Preferr'd to sleeping on her breasts. Waller.

2. Selfish; avaricious.

The man was churlish and evil in his doings. 1 Samuel.

This sullen churlish thief
Had all his mind plac'd upon Mully's beef. King.

3. [Of things.] Unpliant; cross-grained; unmanageable; harsh; not yielding.

If there be emission of spirit, the body of the metal will be hard and churlish. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The Cornish were become, like metal often fired and quenched, churlish and that would sooner break than bow. Bacon's Hen. VII.

In the hundreds of Essex they have a very churlish blue clay. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Vexatious; obstructive.

Will you again unknit
This churlish knot of all abhorred war? Shakesp.

Spain found the war so churlish and longsome, as they found they should consume themselves in an endless war. Bacon.

Spreads a path as clear as the day,
Where no churlish rub says nay. Crashaw.

CHU'RLISHLY. adv. [from churlish.] Rudely; brutally.

To the oak, now regnant, the olive did churlishly put over the son for a reward of the service of his sire. Howel.

CHU'RLISHNESS. n. s. [from churlish; cyrlirceneyrre, Saxon.] Brutality; ruggedness of manner.

Better is the churlishness of a man, than a courteous woman. Ecclus. xlii. 14.

In the churlishness of fortune, a poor honest man suffers in this world. L'Estrange.

CHURME. n. s. [more properly chirm, from the Saxon cyrme, a clamour or noise; as to chirre is to coo as a turtle.] A confused sound; a noise.

He was conveyed to the tower, with the churme of a thousand taunts and reproaches Bacon.

CHURN. n. s. [properly chern, from kern, Dutch; cerene, Sax.] The vessel in which the butter is, by long and violent agitation, coagulated and separated from the serous parts of the milk.

Her aukward fist did ne'er employ the churn. Gay's Pastorals.

To CHURN. v. a. [kernen, Dutch.]

1. To agitate or shake any thing by a violent motion.

Perchance he spoke not; but
Like a full-acorn'd boar, a churning on,
Cried Oh. Shakesp.

Froth fills his chaps; he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.

Churn'd in his teeth the foamy venom rose. Addison.

The mechanism of nature, in converting our aliment, consists in mixing with it animal juices, and in the action of the solid parts, churning them together. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To make butter by agitating the milk.]

The churning of milk bringeth forth butter. Proverbs

You may try the force of imagination, upon staying the coming of butter after the churning Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CHURRWORM. n. s. [from cyrran, Sax.] An insect that turns about nimbly; called also a fancricket. Skinner. Phillips.

To CHUSE. See To CHOOSE.

CHYLA'CEOUS. adj. [from chyle.] Belonging to chyle; consisting of chyle.

When the spirits of the chyle have half fermented the chylaceous mass, it has the state of drink not ripened by fermentation. Floyer on the Humours.

CHYLE. n. s. [χύλος.] The white juice formed in the stomach by digestion of the aliment, and afterwards changed into blood.

This powerful ferment, mingling with the parts,
The leven'd mass to milky chyle converts. Blackmr

The chyle cannot pass through the smallest vessels. Arbuthnot.

CHYLIFA'CTION. n. s. [from chyle.] The act or process of making chyle in the body.

Drinking excessively during the time of chylifactum, stops perspiration. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CHYLIFA'CTIVE. adj. [from chylus, and facio, to make, Lat.] Having the power of making chyle.

CHYLOPOE'TICK. adj. [χύλος and ποιέω.] Having the power, or the office, of forming chyle.

According to the force of the chylopoetick organs, more or less chyle may be extracted from the same food. Arbuthnot.

CHY'LOUS. adj. [from chyle.] Consisting of chyle; partaking of chyle.

Milk is the chylous part of an animal, already prepared. Arbuthnot.

CHY'MICAL. } CHY'MICK. } adj. [chymicus, Lat.]

1. Made by chymistry.

I'm tir'd with waiting for this chymick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

The medicines are ranged in boxes, according to their natures, whether chymical or Galenical preparations. Watts.

2. Relating to chymistry.

Methinks already, from this chymick flame,
I see a city of more precious mold. Dryden.

With chymick art exalts the mineral pow'rs,
And draws the aromatick souls of flow'rs. Pope.

CHY'MIC. n. s. A chymist. Obsolete.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallic nature, seem to have resolved it into nobler use: an art now utterly lost, or perchance kept up by a few chymics. Wotton.

CHY'MICALLY. adv. [from chymical.] In a chymical manner.

CHYMIST. n. s. [See CHYMISTRY.] A professor of chymistry; a philosopher by fire.

The starving chymist, in his golden views
Supremely blest. Pope's Essay on Man.

CHY'MISTRY. n. s. [derived by some from χυμός juice, or κέω to melt; by others from an oriental word, kema black. According to the supposed etymology, it is written with y or e.]

An art whereby sensible bodies contained in vessels, or capable of being contained therein, are so changed by means of certain instruments, and principally fire, that their several powers and virtues are thereby discovered, with a view to philosophy or medicine. Boerhaave

Operations of chymistry fall short of vital force: no chymist can make milk or blood of grass. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CIBA'RIOUS. adj. [cibarius, Lat. from cibus food.] Relating to food; useful for food; edible.

CI'BOL. n. s. [ciboule, Fr.] A small sort of onion used in sallads. This word is common in the Scotch dialect; but the l is not pronounced.

One captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shakesp.

2. A mark; an impression: so used by Shakespeare less properly.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakesp

CICATRI'SANT. n. s. [from cicatrice.] An application that induces a cicatrice.

CICATRI'SIVE. adj. [from cicatrice.] Having the qualities proper to induce a cicatrice.

CICATRIZA'TION. n. s. [from cicatrice.]

1. The act of healing the wound.

A vein bursted, or corroded, in the lungs, is looked upon to be for the most part incurable, because of the motion and coughing of the lungs tearing the gap wider, and hindering the conglutination and cicatrization of the vein. Harvey.

2. The state of being healed, or skinned over.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp's Surgery.

To CI'CATRIZE. v. a. [from cicatrix.]

1. To apply such medicines to wounds, or ulcers, as heal and skin them over. Quincy.

To heal and induce the skin over a sore.

We incarned, and in a few days cicatrized it with a smooth cicatrix. Wiseman on Tumours

CI'CELY. n. s. [myrrhus.] A sort of herb.

CICHORA'CEOUS. adj. [from cichorium, Lat.] Having the qualities of succory.

CICH'-PEASE. n. s. [cicer.] A plant.

To CI'CURATE. v. a. [cicuro, Lat.] To tame; to reclaim from wildness; to make tame and tractable.

Poisons may yet retain some portion of their natures; yet are so refracted, cicurated, and subdued, as not to make good their destructive malignities. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CICU'RATION. n. s. [from cicurate.] The act of taming or reclaiming from wildness.

This holds not only in domestick and mansuete birds, for then it might be the effect of cicuration or institution; but in the wild. Ray on the Creation.

CI'DER. n. s. [cidre, Fr. sidra, Ital. sicera, Lat. σικέρα, שכר.]

1. All kind of strong liquors, except wine. This sense is now wholly obsolete.

2. Liquor made of the juice of fruits pressed.

We had also drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink. Bacon.

3. The juice of apples expressed and fermented. This is now the sense.

To the utmost bounds of this
Wide universe Silurian cider born,
Shall please all tastes, and triumph o'er the vine. Philips

CI'DERIST. n. s. [from cider.] A maker of cider.

When the *cideri*sts have taken care for the best fruit, and ordered them after the best manner they could, yet hath their cider generally proved pale, sharp, and ill tasted. Mortimer.

CI'DERKIN. n. s. [from cider.]

A low word used for the liquor made of the murk or gross matter of apples, after the cider is pressed out, and a convenient quantity of boiled water added to it; the whole infusing for about forty-eight hours. Phillips's World of Words.

The court and prison being within the cincture of one wall. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrils anciently used to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood columns. Chambers.

CI'NDER. n.s. [ceindre, Fr. from cineres, Lat.]

1. A mass ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my cheeks,
That would to cinders burn up modesty,
Did I but speak thy deeds! Shakesp.

There is in smith's cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown.

So snow on Ætna does unmelted lie,
Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

2. A hot coal that has ceased to flame.

If from adown the hopeful chops
The fat upon a cinder drops,
To stinking smoke it turns the flame. Swift.

CI'NDER-WENCH. } n. s. [cinder and wo-
CI'NDER-WOMAN. } man.] A woman whose trade is to rake in heaps of ashes for cinders.

'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,
To find it out's the cinder-woman's trade.
Essay on Satire.

She had above five hundred suits of fine cloaths, and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench.
Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

In the black form of cinder-wench she came,
When love, the hour, the place had banish'd shame. Gay.

CINERA'TION. n. s. [from cineres, Lat.] The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymistry.

CI'NNABAR. n. s. [cinnabaris, Lat.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the factitious cinnabar is called vermilion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureo-ochreous matter.
Woodward's Met. Fossils.

The particles of mercury uniting with the particles of sulphur, compose cinnabar. Newton's Opt.

CINNABAR of Antimony, is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CI'NNAMON. n. s. [cinnamomum, Lat.] The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon. Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water, it yields an oil, which, as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours. Chambers.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet amomum boast. Dry. Fab.

CINNAMON Water, is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine, or white wine. Chambers.

CINQUE-FOIL. n. s. [cinque feuille, Fr.] A kind of five-leaved clover.

CINQUE-PACE. n. s. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace. The first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly and modest, as a measure full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakesp.

CINQUE-PORTS. n. s. [cinque ports, Fr.] Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are have a special governour or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque ports; and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction; their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rumney, and Hithe; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest. Cowell.

They, that bear
The cloth of state above her, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakesp.

CINQUE-SPOTTED. adj. Having five spots.

On her left breast
A mole, cinque spotted, like the crimson drops
I th' bottom of a cowslip. Shakesp.

CI'ON. n. s. [sion, or scion, French.]

1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this, that you call love; to be a sect or cion. Shak.

The stately Caledonian oak, newly settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with cions of his own royal stem. Howell.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock

The cion over-ruleth the stock; and the stock is but passive, and giveth aliment, but no motion, to the graft. Bacon.

CIPHER. n. s. [chifre, Fr. zifra, Ital. cifra, low Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which, standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor. Shakesp.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things. South.

3. An intertexture of letters engraved usually on boxes or plate.

Troy flam'd in burnish'd gold; and o'er the throne,
ARMS AND THE MAN in golden ciphers shone. Pope.

Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some Deep on the new-shorn vagrant's heaving side
To stamp the master's cipher ready stand. Thoms.

4. A character in general.

In succeeding times this wisdom began to be written in ciphers and characters, and letters bearing the form of creatures. Raleigh's History of the World.

5. A secret or occult manner of writing, or the key to it.

In cipher writ, or new-made idioms. Donne.

He was pleased to command me to stay at London, to send and receive all his letters; and I was furnished with nine several ciphers, in order to it. Denham.

To CIPHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise arithmetick.

You have been bred to business; you can cipher: I wonder you never use'd your pen and ink. Arbuthnot.

To CI'PHER. v. a. To write in occult characters.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes: his notes he ciphered with Greek characters. Hayw.

To CI'RCINATE. v. a. [circino, Lat.] To make a circle; to compass round, or turn round. Bailey.

CIRCINA'TION. n. s. [circinatio, Lat.] An orbicular motion; a turning round; a measuring with the compasses. Bailey.

CI'RCLE. n. s. [circulus, Latin.]

1. A line continued till it ends where it begun, having all its parts equidistant from a common centre.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle, in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move; but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle in motion. Locke.

By a circle I understand not here perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth; and which, as to sense, may seem circular. Newton's Opticks.

Then a deeper still
In circle following circle, gathers sound
To close the face of things. Thomson's Summ.

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth. Isaiah.

A great magician,
Obscured in the circle of the forest. Shakesp.

5. An assembly surrounding the principal person.

To have a box where eunuchs sing,
And, foremost in the circle, eye a king.
Pope's Horace.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes. Addison.

Ever since that time, Lisander visits in every circle. Tatler.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be fruit trees in hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in succulent plants, and hot countries. Bacon.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again. Dryd. Virg.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing. Glanville's Scepsis.

That fallacy, called a circle, is when one of the premisses in a syllogism is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion. Watts's Logick.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lye
In circle or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.
Fletcher's Queen of Corinth.

10. Circles of the German Empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten. Trevoux.

To CI'RCLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shak.

2. A plant that creeps upon other supports.

Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers, must be dug up. Mortimer.

3. The name of a particular herb.

The seeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. Miller.

To CLI'MBER, v. n. [from clamber.] To mount with effort; to climb.

In scalling the youngest to plucke off his becke
Beware how ye climber for breaking your neck.
Tusser.

CLIME, n. s. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical.] Climate; region; tract of earth.

He can spread thy name o'er land and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms.
Milton.

They apply the celestial description of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Of beauty sing, her shining progress view,
From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue.
Granville.

We shall meet
In happier climes and on a safer shore. Addison.
Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons in temperate climes, are common and familiar blessings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH, v. a. [clýnga, Sax. to knock, Junius; clingo, in Festus, to encompass, Minshew.]

1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it.

Simois rowls the bodies and the shields
Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear
The dart aloft, and clinch the pointed spear.
Dryden.

2. To contract or double the fingers.

Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinched. Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail in the other side.

4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument.

CLINCH, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A word used in a double meaning: a pun; an ambiguity; a duplicity of meaning, with an identity of expression. How it obtains this meaning is difficult to find. A nail caught on the other side, and doubled, is a nail clinched; a word taken in a different meaning, and doubled in sense, is likewise a clinch.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch, luciferous; searching after the nature of light. Boyle.
Pure clinches the suburbian muse affords,
And Panton waging harmless war with words.
Dryden.
Here one poor word a hundred clinches makes.
Pope.

2. That part of the cable which is fastened to the ring of the anchor.

CLI'NCHER, n. s. [from clinch.] A cramp; a holdfast; a piece of iron bent down to fasten planks.

The wimbles for the work Calypso found;
With those he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound.
Pope.

To CLING, v. n. pret. I clung; part. I have clung. [klynger, Danish.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to stick to; to hold fast upon.

The broil long doubtful stood;
As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choak their art. Shakesp.
The fontanel in his neck was descried by the clinging of his hair to the plaster. Wiseman's Surg.
When they united and together clung,
When undistinguish'd in one heap they hung.
Blackmore.

See in the circle next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love close clinging to her waist. Pope.
That they may the closer cling,
Take your blue ribbon for a string. Swift.

2. To adhere, as followers or friends.

Most popular consul he is grown, methinks:
How the rout cling to him! Ben Jonson's Cataline.

3. To dry up; to consume; to waste; to pine away. [Beclungen theop, a withered tree.]

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee. Shakesp. Macbeth.

CLI'NGY, adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adhesive.

CLI'NICAL, } adj. [κλίνω to lie down.]
CLINICK, } Those that keep their beds; those that are sick, past hopes of recovery. A clinical lecture is a discourse upon a disease, made by the bed of the patient.

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his death-bed. This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

To CLINK, v. a. [perhaps softened from clank, or corrupted from click.] To strike so as to make a small sharp noise.

Five years! a long lease for the clinking of pewter. Shakesp.

To CLINK, v. n. To utter a small, sharp, interrupted noise.

The sever'd bars
Submissive clink against your brazen portals. Prior.
Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking pattens tread.
Gay's Trivia.

CLINK, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp successive noise; a knocking.

I heard the clink and fall of swords. Shakesp.

2. It seems in Spenser to have some unusual sense. I believe the knocker of a door.

Tho' creeping close, behind the wicket's clink,
Privily he peeped out thro' a chink. Spenser.

CLI'NQUANT, adj. [Fr.] Dressed in embroidery, in spangles, false glitter, tinsel finery.

To-day the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English. Shakesp

To CLIP, v. a. [clippan, Sax.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms.

He that before shunn'd her, to shun such harms,
Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms.
Sidney.

Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly and nobly with thy love. Shakesp.
O nation, that thou couldst remove
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about.
Shakesp.
Enter the city; clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats. Shakesp.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead man's graves. Shakesp.

The male resteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Ray.

2. To cut with sheers. [klipper, Danish; klippen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by inclosing and embracing.]

Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Sidney.
Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame,
Suckling.

He clips hope's wings, whose airy bliss
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.
But love had clipp'd his wings and cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court.
Dryden's Fables.

If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheists may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them.
Bentley.

By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew
Pope.

He spent every day ten hours doxing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off.

We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting off a nerve. Bentley's Sermons.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping. Locke.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipt, but so. Shakesp.

Mrs. Mayoress clipped the king's English. Addis.

Even in London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs. Swift.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.

Where is he living, clipt in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil? Shakesp.

To CLIP. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry miss'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind. Dryden.

CLI'PPER. n. s. [from clip.] One that debases coin by cutting.

It is no English treason to cut
French crowns, and to-morrow the king
Himself will be a clipper. Shakesp.

No coins pleased some medallists more than those which had passed through the hands of an old Roman clipper. Addison.

CLI'PPING. n. s. [from clip.] The part cut or clipped off.

Beings purely material, without sense or thought, as the clippings of our beards, and parings of our nails. Locke.

CLI'VER. n. s. An herb. More properly written cleaver.

It grows wild, the seeds sticking to the clothes of such as pass by them. It is sometimes used in medicine. Miller.

CLOAK. n. s. [lach, Saxon.]

1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.

You may bear it
Under a cloke that is of any length Shakesp.

Their clokes were cloth of silver, mixed with gold. Dryden.

All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his cloak, which he held only the faster. Locke.

Nimbly he rose, and cast his garment down,
That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. A concealment; a cover.

Not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness. Peter.

To CLOAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

CLO'CKWORK. n. s. [from clock and work.] Movements by weights or springs like those of a clock.

So if unprejudic'd you scan
The goings of this clock-work, man;
You find a hundred movements made
By fine devices in his head:
But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke,
That tells this being what's o'clock. Prior.

Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop, full of fire and clockwork. Addison.

You look like a puppet moved by clockwork.
Arbuthnot.

CLOD. n. s. [club, Sax. a little hillock; klotte, Dutch]

1. A lump of earth or clay; such a body of earth as cleaves or hangs together.

The earth that casteth up from the plough a great clod, is not so good as that which casteth up a smaller clod. Bacon.

I'll cut up, as plows
Do barren lands, and strike together flints
And clods, th' ungrateful senate and the people.
Ben Jonson.

Who smooths with harrows, or who pounds with rakes,
The crumbling clods. Dryden.

2. A turf; the ground.

CLOUD. n. s. [The derivation is not known. Minshew derives it from claudo to shut; Somner from clod; Casaubon from ἀχλὺς darkness; Skinner from kladde, Dutch, a spot.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Shakesp. Richard III.
As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour and therefore a watery cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist; or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew's Cosmologia.
Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.
How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;
And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply.
Roscommon.
The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

Bacon's Natural History.

Bitumen is found in lumps or coagulated masses in some springs. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the runnet, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum.
Arbuthnot.

To COA'GULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulateth little, but mingleth; and the spirit swims not above. Bacon.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coagulate into a whitish body, almost like butter. Boyle.

COAGULA'TION. n. s. [from coagulate.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbuthnot.

COA'GULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULA'TOR. n. s. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours, are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrassating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Arbuthnot.

COAL. n. s. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossile fewel.

Coal is a black, sulphurous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fewel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit coal is called cannel, or canole coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy, and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out. Chambers.

Coals are solid, dry, opake, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes. Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforc'd, falls by her own consent;
As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent. Denham.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marle.
Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whatsoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstones in the sun. Shakesp.

You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Shakespeare.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,
And his face kindled like a burning coal. Dryden.

To COAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost in buying the wood for this service; felling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same, when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome ways. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon.

2. To delineate with a coal.

Marvailing, he coaled out rhimes upon the wall, near to the picture. Camden.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of a coal.

As burning Ætna, from his boiling stew,
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke.
Fairy Queen.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous efflorescencies, and complexional tinctures. Brown.

Coal-black his colour, but like jet it shone;
His legs and flowing tail were white alone. Dryd.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coalpit. Woodward.

COAL-STONE. n. s. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. s. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coals are found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Felton.

CO'ALERY. n. s. [from coal.] A place where coals are dug.

Two fine stalactitæ were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery. Woodward.

To* COALE'SCE. v. n. [coalesco, Lat.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALE'SCENCE. n. s. [from coalesce.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALI'TION. n. s. [from coalesco, coalitum, Lat.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistencies, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Granville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence. Hale.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

CO'ALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coaly Tine, or ancient hallow'd Dee. Milton.

COAPTA'TION. n. s. [from con and apto, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Broome.

To* COA'RCT. } To* COA'RCTATE. } v. a. [coarcto, Lat.]

1. To straiten; to confine into a narrow compass.

The wind finding the room in the form of a trunk, and coarctated therein, forced the stones of the window, like pellets, clean through it. Bacon.

2. To contract power; to restrain.

If a man coarcts himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself, that he has thus coarcted or straitened himself so far Ayliffe.

COARCTA'TION. n. s. [from coarct.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interiour sound. Bacon.

2. Contraction of any space.

Straiten the artery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat, below or beyond the coarctation. Ray.

3. Restraint of liberty.

Election is opposed not only to coaction, but also to coarctation, or determination to one. Bramhall.

COARSE. adj.

All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring.
Spenser.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

At each trumpet was a banner bound,
Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large
Their master's coat of arms and knightly charge.
Dryden.

To COAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to invest; to overspread: as, to coat a retort; to coat a ceiling.

To COAX. v. a. To wheedle; to flatter, to humour. A low word.

The nurse had changed her note; she was muzzling and coaxing the child; that's a good dear, says she. L'Estrange

I coax! I wheedle! I'm above it.
Farquhar's Recruiting Officer.

CO'AXER. n. s. [from the verb.] A wheedler; a flatterer.

COB. A word often used in the composition of low terms; corrupted from cop, Sax. kopf, Germ. the head or top.

COB. n. s.

1. A sort of sea-fowl; called also sea-cob. Phillips.

2. In some provinces, and probably in old language, a spider; whence cobweb.

CO'BALT. n. s. A marcasite frequent in Saxony.

Cobalt is plentifully impregnated with arsenick; contains copper and some silver. Being sublimed, the flores are of a blue colour: these, German mineralogists call zaffir. Woodward

Cobalt is a dense, compact and ponderous mineral, very bright and shining, and much resembling some of the antimonial ores. It is found in Germany, Saxony, Bohemia, and England; but ours is a poor kind. From cobalt are produced the three sorts of arsenick, white, yellow, and red, as also zaffre and smalt. Hill on Fossils.

To CO'BBLE. v. a. [kobler, Dan.]

1. To mend any thing coarsely: used generally of shoes.

If you be out, Sir, I can mend you.—Why, Sir, cobble you. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
What's done i' th' capitol, making parties strong,
And feeble such as stand not in their liking
Below their cobbled shoes. Shakesp. Coriolanus

Many underlayers, when they could not live upon their trade, have raised themselves from cobbling to fluxing. L'Estrange.

2. To do or make any thing clumsily, or unhandily.

Reject the nauseous praises of the times;
Give thy base poets back their cobbled rhimes.
Dryden.

Believe not that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering, nothing effected for any purpose or design, but all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together. Bentley.

CO'BBLER. n. s. [from cobble.]

1. A mender of old shoes.

Not many years ago it happened that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal.
Addison on Italy.

2. A clumsy workman in general.

What trade are you?—
Truly, Sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

3. In a kind of proverbial sense, any mean person.

Think you the great prerogative t' enjoy
Of doing ill by virtue of that race?
As if what we esteem in cobblers base
Would the high family of Brutus grace. Dry. Juv.

CO'BIRONS. n. s. [cob and iron.] Irons with a knob at the upper end.

The implements of the kitchen; as spits, ranges, cobirons, and pots. Bacon's Physical Remains.

CO'BISHOP. n. s. [con and bishop.] A coadjutant bishop.

Valerius, advanced in years, and a Grecian by birth, not qualified to preach in the Latin tongue, made use of Austin as a cobishop, for the benefit of the church of Hippo. Ayliffe.

CO'BNUT. n. s. [cob and nut.] A boy's game; the conquering nut.

CO'BSWAN. n. s. [cob head, and swan.] The head or leading swan.

I am not taken
With a cobswan, or a high mounting bull,
As foolish Leda and Europa were.
Ben Jonson's Cataline.

CO'BWEB n. s. [koppech, Dut.]

1. The web or net of a spider: from cob a spider.

The luckless Clarion,
With violent swift flight, forth carried
Into the cursed cobweb, which his foe
Had framed for his final overthrow. Spenser.

Is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewed, and cobwebs swept?
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

The spider, in the house of a burgher, fell presently to her network of drawing cobwebs up and down L'Estrange.

2. Any snare, or trap: implying insidiousness and weakness.

For he a rope of sand could twist
As tough as learned Sorbonist;
And weave fine cobwebs fit for scull
That's empty when the moon is full. Hudibras

Chronology at best is but a cobweb law, and he broke through it with his weight. Dryden.

Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies, but let wasps and hornets break through.
Swift.

CO'COA. n. s. See CACAO.

COCCI'FEROUS. adj. [from κοκκός, and fero, Lat.] All plants or trees are so called that have berries. Quincy.

CO'CHINEAL. n. s. [cochinilla, Span. a woodlouse.]

An insect gathered upon the opuntia, and dried: from which a beautiful red colour is extracted. Hill.

CO'CHLEARY. adj. [from cochlea, Lat. a screw. Screwform; in the form of a screw.

That at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about it, which agreeth with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CO'CHLEATED. adj. [from cochlea, Lat.] Of a screwed or turbinated form.

Two pieces of stone, struck forth of the cavity of the umbilici of shells, of the same sort with the foregoing: they are of a cochleated figure.
Woodward on Fossils.

COCK. n. s. [cocc, Saxon; coq, Fr.]

1. The male to the hen; a domestick fowl, remarkable for his gallantry, pride, and courage.

Cocks have great combs and spurs; hens, little or none. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

True cocks o' th' game,
That never ask for what, or whom, they fight;
But turn 'em out, and shew 'em but a foe,
Cry liberty, and that's a cause of quarrel. Dryd.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearless cock.
Thomson's Spring.

2. The male of any small birds.

Calves and philosophers, tygers and statesmen, cock sparrows and coquets, exactly resemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. The weathercock that shews the direction of the wind by turning.

You cataracts and hurricanes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!
Shakesp.

4. A spout to let out water at will, by turning the stop; the handle had probably a cock on the top. Things that were contrived to turn, seem anciently to have had that form, whatever was the reason.

When every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy,
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow Shakesp.

It were good there were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glass. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Thus the small jett, which hasty hands unlock,
Spirts in the gardener's eyes who turns the cock.
Pope.

5. The notch of an arrow.

6. The part of the lock of a gun that strikes with the flint. [from cocca, Ital. the notch of an arrow. Skinner. Perhaps from the action, like that of a cock pecking; but it was, I think, so called when it had not its present form.]

With hasty rage he snatch'd
His gunshot, that in holsters watch'd;
And bending cock, he level'd full
Against th' outside of Talgol's skull. Hudibras.

A seven-shot gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges. Under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder from the box to a funnel at the further end of the lock. Grew.

7. A conqueror; a leader; a governing man.

Sir Andrew is the cock of the club since he left us. Addison.

My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool; But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school.
Swift

8. Cockcrowing; a note of the time in a morning.

We were carousing till the second cock. Shak.
He begins at curfew, and goes till the first cock.
Shakesp.

9. A cockboat; a small boat.

They take view of all sized cocks, barges, and fisherboats hovering on the coast
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shakesp.

10. A small heap of hay. [Properly cop.]

As soon as the dew is off the ground, spread the hay again, and turn it, that it may wither on the other side: then handle it, and, if you find it dry, make it up into cocks. Mortimer.

11. The form of a hat. [from the comb of the cock.]

You see many a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, moulding it into several different cocks. Addison.

12. The style or gnomon of a dial. Cham.

13. The needle of a balance.

14. Cock on the Hoop. Triumphant; exulting.

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop?
Camden's Remains.

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock a hoop! Shakesp.

For Hudibras, who thought h' had won
The field, as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

To COCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.

Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears;
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears. Gay's Pas.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn,
But Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here strok'd his chin and cock'd his hat. Prior.

An alert young fellow cocked his hat upon a friend of his who entered Addison's Spectator.

3. To mould the form of the hat.

4. To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.

Some of them holding up their pistols, cocked, near the door of the house, which they kept open. Dryden's Dedication, Æneid.

5. To raise hay in small heaps.

Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Pastorals.

To COCK. v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or menacing, or pert.

Sir Fopling is a fool so nicely writ;
The ladies would mistake him for a wit;
And when he sings, talks loud, and cocks would cry,
I vow, methinks, he's pretty company. Dryden.

Every one cocks and struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us. Addison's Guardian.

2. To train or use fighting cocks.

Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet. Ben Jonson.

COCK, in composition, signifies small or little.

COCKA'DE. n. s. [from cock.] A ribband worn in the hat.

CO'CKATRICE. n. s. [from cock, and atten, Sax. a serpent.] A serpent supposed to rise from a cock's egg.

They will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices. Shakesp.

This was the end of this little cockatrice of a king, that was able to destroy those that did not espy him first. Bacon.

This cockatrice is soonest crushed in the shell; but, if it grows, it turns to a serpent and a dragon. Taylor.

My wife! 'tis she, the very cockatrice! Congreve.

CO'CKBOAT. n. s. [cock and boat.] A small boat belonging to a ship.

That invincible armada, which having not fired a cottage of ours at land, nor taken a cockboat of ours at sea, wandered through the wilderness of the northern seas. Bacon.

Did they think it less dishonour to God to be like a brute, or a plant, or a cockboat, than to be like a man? Stillingfleet.

CO'CKBROTH. n. s. Broth made by boiling a cock.

Diet upon spoon-meats; as veal or cockbroths prepared with French barley. Harvey on Consump.

CO'CKCROWING. n. s. [cock and crow.] The time at which cocks crow; the morning.

Ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning. Mark.

To CO'CKER. v. a. [coqueliner, Fr.] To cade; to fondle; to indulge.

Most children's constitutions are spoiled by cockering and tenderness. Locke on Education.

He that will give his son sugar plums to make him learn, does but authorise his love of pleasure, and cocker up that propensity which he ought to subdue. Locke on Education.

Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Dress'd like any Lady May'ress,
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

CO'CKER. n. s. [from cock.] One who follows the sport of cockfighting.

CO'CKEREL. n. s. [from cock.] A young cock.

Which of them first begins to crow?—
The old cock?—The cockerel. Shakesp.

What wilt thou be, young cockerel, when thy spurs
Are grown to sharpness. Dryden.

CO'CKET. n. s. [of uncertain derivation.] A seal belonging to the king's customhouse: likewise a scroll of parchment, sealed, and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandize is entered. Cowell.

The greatest profit did arise by the cocket of hides; for wool and woolfells were ever of little value in this kingdom. Davies.

CO'CKFIGHT. n. s. [cock and fight.] A battle or match of cocks.

In cockfights, to make one cock more hardy, and the other more cowardly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

At the seasons of football and cockfighting, these little republicks reassume their national hatred to each other. Addison.

CO'CKHORSE. adj. [cock and horse.] On horseback; triumphant; exulting.

Alma, they strenuously maintain,
Sits cockhorse on her throne the brain. Prior.

CO'CKLE. n. s. [coquille, Fr.]

1. A small testaceous fish.

It is a cockle or a walnut shell. Shakesp.

We may, I think, from the make of an oyster, or cockle, reasonably conclude, that it has not so many, nor so quick, senses as a man. Locke.

Three common cockle shells, out of gravel pits. Woodward.

2. A little or young cock. Obsolete.

They bearen the crag so stiff and so state,
As cockle on his dunghill crowing crank. Spenser's Pastorals.

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle strays. Donne.

To CO'CKLE. v. a. [from cockle.] To contract into wrinkles, like the shell of a cockle.

Show'rs soon drench the camblet's cockled grain. Gay.

CO'CKLED. adj. [from cockle.] Shelled; or perhaps cochleate, turbinated.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shak.

CO'CKLOFT. n. s. [cock and loft.] The room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost; unless it be rather corrupted from coploft, the cop or top of the house.

If the lowest floors already burn,
Cocklofts and garrets soon will take their turn. Dryden's Juvenal.

My garrets, or rather my cocklofts indeed, are very indifferently furnished; but they are rooms to lay lumber in. Swift.

CO'CKMASTER. n. s. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

CO'CKMATCH. n. s. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Addison.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CO'CKNEY. n. s. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, païs de cocaigne, for a country of dainties:

Paris est pour un riche un païs de cocaigne. Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see by west Spayng,
Is a lond yhote cocayng.

On which Dr. Hicks has this remark:

Nunc coquin, coquine: quæ olim apud Gallos, otio, gulæ, et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem, significabant. Hinc urbanos, utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentiaram et desidiosam avocatos, pagani nostri olim cokaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poëta hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum qui, desidiæ dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinæ amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur; monasteria & monasticam vitam inde scriptione terræ cockaineæ parabolice perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' pasty alive. Shakesp. King Lear

For who is such a cockney in his heart,
Proud of the plenty of the southern part,
To scorn that union, by which we may
Boast 'twas his countryman that writ this play? Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber the world will prove a cockney. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

CO'CKPIT. n. s. [cock and pit.]

1. The area where cocks fight.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? Shakesp.

And now have I gained the cockpit of the western world, and academy of arms, for many years. Howel's Vocal Forest.

2. A place on the lower deck of a man of war, where are subdivisions for the purser, the surgeon, and his mates. Harris.

I thought myself cocksure of his horse, which he readily promised me. Pope's Letters.

Co'CKSWAIN. n. s. [cogzrþaine, Sax.] The officer who has the command of the cockboat. Corruptly COXON.

Co'CKWEED. n. s. [from cock and weed.] The name of a plant, called also Dittander, or Pepperwort.

COCOA. n. s. [cacaotal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure; is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fattish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness; when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocoa nuts usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Med.

Amid' those orchards of the sun,
Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freshening wine.
Thomson.

Co'CTILE. adj. [coctilis, Lat.] Made by baking, as a brick.

Co'CTION. n. s. [coctio, Lat.] The act of boiling.

The disease is sometimes attended with expectoration from the lungs, and that is taken off by a coction and resolution of the feverish matter, or terminates in suppurations or a gangrene. Arbuthnot on Dict.

COD. } n. s. [asellus.] A sea
Co'DFISH. } fish.

COD. n. s. [cobbe, Sax.] Any case or husk in which seeds are lodged.

Thy corn thou there may'st safely sow,
Where in full cods last year rich pease did grow.
May.

They let pease lie in small heaps as they are reaped, till they find the hawm and cod dry. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To COD. v. n. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cod.

All codded grain being a destroyer of weeds, an improver of land, and a preparer of it for other crops. Mortimer.

Co'DDERS. n. s. [from cod.] Gatherers of pease. Dict.

CODE. n. s. [codex, Lat.]

1. A book.
2. A book of the civil law.

We find in the Theodotian and Justinian code the interest of trade very well provided for. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves; and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are.
Pope's Sat.

Co'DICIL. n. s. [codicillus, Lat.] An appendage to a will.

The man suspects his lady's crying
Was but to gain him to appoint her,
By codicil, a larger jointure. Prior.

Co'DILLE. n. s. [codille, Fr. codillo, Span.] A term at ombre, when the game is won.

She sees, and trembles at th' approaching ill;
Just in the jaws of ruin, and codille.
Pope's Rape of the Lock.

To CO'DLE. v. a. [coquo, coctulo, Lat. Skinner.] To parboil; to soften by the heat of water.

Co'DLING. n. s. [from To codle.] An apple generally codled, to be mixed with milk.

In July come gilliflowers of all varieties, early pears and plums in fruit, gennitings and codlings. Bacon's Essays.

Their entertainment at the height,
In cream and codlings rev'lling with delight.
King's Cookery.

He let it lie all winter in a gravel walk, south of a codling hedge. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A codling, ere it went his lip in,
Would straight become a golden pippin. Swift.

COE'FFICACY. n. s. [con and efficacia, Lat.] The power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

We cannot in general infer the efficacy of those stars, or coefficacy particular in medications. Brown's Vulg. Err.

COEFFI'CIENCY. n. s. [con and efficio, Lat.] Co-operation; the state of acting together to some single end.

The managing and carrying on of this work, by the spirits instrumental coefficiency, requires that they be kept together, without distraction or dissipation. Glanville's Scepsis.

COEFFI'CIENT. n. s. [con and efficiens, Lat.]

1. That which unites its action with the action of another.
2. [In algebra.] Such numbers, or given quantities, that are put before letters, or unknown quantities, into which letters they are supposed to be multiplied, and so do make a rectangle or product, with the letters; as, 4 a, b x, c x x; where 4 is the coefficient of 4 a, b of b x, and c of c x x. Chambers.
3. In fluxions.

The coefficient of any generating term (in fluxions) is the quantity arising by the division of that term, by the generated quantity. Chambers.

COE'LIACK Passion. [κοιλία the belly.] A diarrhœa, or flux, that arises from the indigestion or putrefaction of food in the stomach and bowels, whereby the aliment comes away little altered from what it was when eaten, or changed like corrupted stinking flesh. Quincy.

COE'MPTION. n. s. [coemptio, Lat.] The act of buying up the whole quantity of any thing.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon's Essays.

COE'QUAL. adj. [from con and equalis, Lat.] Equal; being of the same rank or dignity with another.

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,
If once he came to be a cardinal,
He'll make his cap coequal with the crown.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

COEQUA'LITY. n. s. [from coequal.] The state of being equal.

To COE'RCE. v. a. [coerceo, Latin.] To restrain; to keep in order by force.

Punishments are manifold, that they may coerce this profligate sort. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COE'RCIBLE. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That may be restrained.
2. That ought to be restrained.

COE'RCION. n. s. [from coerce.] Penal restraint; check.

The coercion or execution of the sentence in ecclesiastical courts, is only by excommunication of the person contumacious. Hale's Common Law.

Government has coercion and animadversion upon such as neglect their duty; without which coercive power, all government is toothless and precarious. South.

COE'RCIVE. adj. [from coerce.

1. That which has the power of laying restraint.

All things on the surface spread, are bound
By their coercive vigour to the ground! Blackmore.

2. That which has the authority of restraining by punishment.

For ministers to seek that themselves might have coercive power over the church, would have been hardly construed. Hooker Preface.

The virtues of a general, or a king, are prudence, counsel, active fortitude, coercive power, awful command, and the exercise of magnanimity, as well as justice. Dryden.

COESSE'NTIAL. adj. [con and essentia, Latin.] Participating of the same essence.

The Lord our God is but one God, in which indivisible unity we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself, we glorify that consubstantial Word, which is the Son; we bless and magnify that coessential Spirit eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

COESSENTIA'LITY. n. s. [from coessential.] Participation of the same essence.

COETA'NEOUS. adj. [con and ætas, Lat.] Of the same age with another: with to.

COETE'RNITY. n. s. [from coeternal.] Having existence from eternity equal with another eternal being.

The eternity of the Son's generation, and his coeternity and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven, and was incarnate. Hammond's Fundamentals.

COE'VAL. adj. [cœvus, Latin.]

1. Of the same age.

Even his teeth and white, like a young flock,
Coeval, and new-shorn, from the clear brook
Recent. Dryden.

2. Of the same age with another; followed by with.

This religion cannot pretend to be coeval with man. Hale.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis, are coeval with the former. Bentl.

Silence, coeval with eternity!
Thou wert, ere nature first began to be:
'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee! Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion ancienter than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CO'EVAL. n. s. [from the adjective.] A contemporary; but properly one not only living at the same time, but of the same time of life.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good-nature. Pope.

CO'EVOUS. adj. [cœvus, Lat.] One of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other thing coevous to it. South.

To COEXI'ST. v. n. [con and existo, Lat.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale's Orig. of Mank.

Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexisted. Locke.

COEXI'STENCE. n. s. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

Locke, who in the preceding lines has coexisted with, has here coexistence to

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grew's Cos.

COEXI'STENT. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but coexistent with the act. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

Time is taken for so much of duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or cotemporary with it. Bentley.

To COEXTE'ND. v. a. [con and extendo, Lat.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grew's Cosmologia.

COEXTE'NSION. n. s. [from coextend.] The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

Though it be a spirit, I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale.

CO'FFEE. n. s. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced caheu by the Turks, and cahuah by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick jessamine.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in its native place of growth; but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. Miller.

COFFEE denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffeeman, and introduced the drink among us. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as soot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope

Cogni'tion. n. s. [cognitio, Lat.] Knowledge; complete conviction.

I will not be myself, nor have cognition
Of what I feel: I am all patience.
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

God, as he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all; not only in power, as under his subjection; or in his presence, as in his cognition; but in their very essence, as in the soul of their causalities. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Co'gnitive. adj. [from cognitus, Lat.] Having the power of knowing.

Unless the understanding employ and exercise its cognitive or apprehensive power about these terms, there can be no actual apprehension of them. South's Sermons.

Co'gnizable. adj. [cognoisable, Fr.]

1. That falls under judicial notice.

2. Liable to be tried, judged, or examined.

Some are merely of ecclesiastical cognizance; others of a mixed nature, such as are cognizable both in the ecclesiastical and secular courts. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Co'gnizance. n. s. [connoisance, Fr.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority.

It is worth the while, however, to consider how we may discountenance and prevent those evils which the law can take no cognizance of. L'Estrange.

Happiness or misery, in converse with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of. South.

The moral crime is completed, there are only circumstances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law. Addison.

2. A badge, by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the earl's servants stood, in a seemly manner, in their livery coats, with cognizances, ranged on both sides, and made the king a bow. Bacon's Henry VII.

These were the proper cognizances and coat-arms of the tribes. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Cogno'minal. adj. cognomen, Lat.] Having the same name.

Nor do those animals more resemble the creatures on earth, than they on earth the constellations, which pass under animal names in heaven; nor the dog-fish at sea much more make out the dog of the land, than his cognominal or namesake in the heavens. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Cognomina'tion. n. s. [cognomen, Lat.]

1. A surname; the name of a family.

2. A name added from any accident or quality.

To* Cohe're. v. n. [cohæreo, Lat.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly plain, polite, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do cohere firmly together as one. Woodward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cohere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

None want a place; for all their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and cohe'r'd around;
Not closer, orb in orb conglob'd, are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen.
Pope's Dunciad.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time cohe'r'd with place, or place with wishing. Shakesp.

4. To agree.

Cohe'rence. } n. s. [cohærentia,
Cohe'rency. } Lat.]

1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist divulsion and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or, being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of, the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting-place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooker, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him.
Locke's Preface to St. Paul's Epistles.

COHE'RENT. adj. [cohærens, Lat.]

1. Sticking together; so as to resist separation.
By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Where all must full, or not coherent be;
And all that rises, rise in due degree.
Pope's Essay on Man.

2. Connected; united.
The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next, and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at. Locke.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.
Instruct my daughter,
That time and place, with this deceit so lawful,
May prove coherent.
Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.
A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules.
Watts's Logick.

COHE'SION. n. s. [from cohere.]

1. The act of sticking together.
Hard particles heaped together touch in a few points, and must be separable by a less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton's Opt.
Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.
What cause of their cohesion can you find?
What props support, what chains the fabrick bind? Blackmore.

3. Connection; dependence.
In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion come to be united in their heads.
Locke.

COHE'SIVE. adv. [from cohere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHE'SIVENESS. n. s. [from cohesive.] The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

2. A wooden wedge used by printers.

To* COIL. v. a. [cueillir, Fr.] To gather into a narrow compass; as, to coil a rope, to wind it in a ring.
The lurking particles of air, so expanding themselves, must necessarily plump out the sides of the bladder, and so keep them turgid, until the pressure of the air, that at first coiled them, be readmitted to do the same thing again. Boyle

COIL. n. s. [kolleren, Germ.]

1. Tumult; turmoil; bustle; stir; hurry; confusion.
Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason. Shakesp. Tempest.
You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you. Shak.
In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. A rope wound into a ring.

COIN. n. s. [coigne, Fr.] A corner; any thing standing out angularly; a square brick cut diagonally: called often quoin, or quine.

COIN. n. s. [by some imagined to come from cuneus a wedge, because metal is cut in wedges to be coined.]

1. Money stamped with a legal impression.
He gave Dametas a good sum of gold in ready coin, which Menalcas had bequeathed. Sidney.
You have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.
I cannot tell how the poets will succeed in the explication of coins, to which they are generally very great strangers. Addison.
She now contracts her vast design,
And all her triumphs shrink into a coin. Pope.

2. Payment of any kind.
The loss of present advantage to flesh and blood, is repaid in a nobler coin. Hammond's Fundamentals.

To* COIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

Can we be sure that this medal was really coined by an artificer, or is but a product of the soil from whence it was taken? Entley.

2. To make or invent.
My lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those measles
Which we disdain should tetter us.
Shakesp. Coriolanus

3. To make or forge any thing, in an ill sense.
Never coin a formal lye on't,
To make the knight o'ercome the giant.
Hudibras.
Those motives induc'd Virgil to coin his fable.
Dryden.
Some tale, some new pretence, he daily coin'd,
To sooth his sister, and delude her mind.
Dryden's Virgil.
A term is coined to make the conveyance easy.
Atterbury.

CO'INAGE. n. s. [from coin.]

1. The art or practice of coining money.
The care of the coinage was committed to the inferiour magistrates; and I don't find that they had a publick trial, as we solemnly practise in this country. Arbuthnot.

2. Coin; money; stamped and legitimated metal.
This is conceived to be a coinage of some Jews, in derision of Christians, who first began that portrait. Brown.
Moor was forced to leave off coining, by the great crowds of people continually offering to return his coinage upon him. Swift.

3. The charges of coining money.

4. New production; invention.
Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

5. Forgery; invention.
This is the very coinage of your brain;
This bodiless creation ecstacy
Is very cunning in. Shakesp. Hamlet.

To* COINCI'DE. v. n. [coincido, Lat.]

1. To fall upon the same point; to meet in the same point.
If the equator and ecliptick had coincided, it would have rendered the annual revolution of the earth useless. Cheyne.

3. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their forces, the full power of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakesp. Henry V.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acrid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will soonest find a little warmth than an hot Bacon's Nat. Hist.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned; wanting ardour.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull. Hooker's Preface.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books. Ascham.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would
Thus violently redress.—Sir, these cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous. Shakesp.

New dated letters these,
Their cold intent, tenour, and substance thus;
Here doth he wish his person, and his power,
The which he could not levy. Shakesp. Henry IV.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened our prisoners with the sword. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator. Burnet's Preface to the Theory of the Earth.

No drum or trumpet needs
T' inspire the coward, or to warm the cold;
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold Dryden.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,
And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame. Rowe.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Unaffecting; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays. Ben Jonson.

As is a dead man's nose. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

COLD. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorifick power.

Fair lined slippers for the cold. Shakesp.

Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby she chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold, we must stay till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains: and when all is done, we cannot obtain it in any great degree. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The sun
Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat
Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call
Decrepit winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Milton.

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; chilness.

When she saw her lord prepar'd to part
A deadly cold ran shiv'ring to her heart. Dry. Fab.

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.

What disease hast thou?
A whoreson cold, Sir; a cough. Shak. Henry IV.
Let no ungentle cold destroy
All taste we have of heavenly joy. Roscommon.

Those rains, so covering the earth, might providentially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

CO'LDLY. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.

2. Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;
We coldly pause for thee. Shakesp. King John

Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,
Nor would believe my lord had sent;
So never offer'd once to stir,
But coldly said, Your servant, Sir. Swift.

CO'LDNESS. n. s. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle's Experiments.

Such was the discord, which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists.
Denham.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also for the most part, hotlier prosecuted: forasmuch as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably construed. Hooker's Dedication.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends. Arbuthnot.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise
Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom!
Addison's Cato.

Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse,
And solve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Prior.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps.
Pope's Windsor Forest.

COLE. n. s. [caþl, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

CO'LESEED. n. s. [from cole and seed.] Cabbage seed.

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but colseed or barley, and then wheat. Mortimer.

CO'LEWORT. n. s. [caþlþýrt, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also recommended to bathe them. Wiseman of an Erysipelas

She took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot;)
She stripp'd the stalks of all their leaves, the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd
Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow.
Gay.

CO'LICK. n. s. [colicus, Lat.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels, from flatuses and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places streightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk cathartick, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper, which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbuthnot.

CO'LICK. adj. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton.

To COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus, Lat.] To fall together; to close so as that one side touches the other.

Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Shakesp.

Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose
Of high collateral glory. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Running parallel.
3. Diffused on either side.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection; and beget
Like of his like, his image multiply'd
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love and dearest amity.
Milton's Par. Lost.

4. In genealogy, those that stand in equal relation to some common ancestor.

The estate and inheritance of a person dying intestate, is, by right of devolution, according to the civil law, given to such as are allied to him, ex latere, commonly styled collaterals, if there be no ascendants or descendants surviving at the time of his death. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Not direct; not immediate.

They shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me;
If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give
To you in satisfaction. Shakesp

6. Concurrent.

All the force of the motive lies within itself: it receives no collateral strength from external considerations. Atterbury.

COLLA'TERALLY. adv. [from collateral.]

1. Side by side.

These pullies may be multiplied according to sundry different situations, not only when they are subordinate, but also when they are placed collaterally. Wilkins.

2. Indirectly.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have created two enemies: the papists more directly, because they have kept the scripture from us; and the fanaticks more collaterally, because they have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit. Dryden.

3. In collateral relation.

COLLATION. n. s. [collatio, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring or bestowing; gift.

Neither are we to give thanks alone for the first collation of these benefits, but also for their preservation. Ray on the Creation.

After the incorporation of metals by simple colliquefaction, for the better discovering of the nature and consents and dissents of metals, it would be tried by incorporating of their dissolutions. Bacon's Physical Remains.

COLLI'SION. n. s. [from collisio, Lat.]

1. The act of striking two bodies together.

Or, by collision of two bodies, grind
The air attrite to fire. Milton's Par. Lost.

The flint and the steel you may move apart as long as you please; but it is the hitting and collision of them that must make them strike fire. Bentley.

2. The state of being struck together; a clash.

Then from the clashes between popes and kings,
Debate, like sparks from flint's collision, springs. Denham.

The devil sometimes borrowed fire from the altar to consume the votaries; and, by the mutual collision of well-meant zeal, set even orthodox Christians in a flame. Decay of Piety.

To CO'LLOCATE. v. a. [colloco, Lat.] To place; to station.

If you desire to superinduce any virtue upon a person, take the creature in which that virtue is most eminent: of that creature take the parts wherein that virtue is collocate. Bacon.

CO'LON. n. s. [κῶλον a member.]

1. A point (:) used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed; nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used, before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forbear to succour him.
2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum in the rectum. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound. Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid, acid smell in rabbits. Floyer on the Humours.

CO'LONEL. n. s. [of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonialis the leader of a colony. Minshew deduces it from colonna a pillar: as, patriæ columen; exercitus columen. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally sounded with only two distinct syllables, col nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton.

CO'LONELSHIP. n. s. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift

To CO'LONIZE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies:

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory: so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention. Bacon's Holy War

Druina hath advantage by acquest of islands, which she colonizeth and fortifieth daily. Howel's Vocal Forest.

COLONNA'DE n. s. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

1. A peristyle of a circular figure; or a series of columns disposed in a circle, and insulated within side. Builder's Dic.

Here circling colonnades the ground inclose,
And here the marble statues breathe in rows. Addison

2. Any series or range of pillars.

For you my colonnades extend their wings. Pope.

CO'LONY. n. s. [colonia, Lat.]

1. A body of people drawn from the mother country to inhabit some distant place.

To these new inhabitants and colonies he gave the same law under which they were born and bred. Spenser on Ireland.

Rooting out these two rebellious septs, he placed English colonies in their rooms. Davies on Ireland.

Orisis, or the Bacchus of the ancients, is reported to have civilized the Indians, planting colonies, and building cities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The country planted; a plantation.

The rising city, which from far you see,
Is Carthage, and a Tyrian colony. Dryden's Virgil.

CO'LOPHONY. n. s. [from Colophon, a city, whence it came.] Rosin.

Of Venetian turpentine, slowly evaporating about a fourth or fifth part, the remaining substance suffered to cool, would afford me a coherent body, or a fine colophony. Boyle.

Turpentines and oils leave a colophony, upon a separation of their thinner oil. Floyer on the Humours

COLOQUI'NTEDA. n. s. [coloquynthis, Lat. κολόκυνθις.] The fruit of a plant of the same name, brought from the Levant, about the bigness of a large orange, and often called bitter apple. Both the seed and pulp are intolerably bitter. It is a violent purgative, of considerable use in medicine. Chambers.

CO'LORATE. adj. [coloratus, Lat.] Coloured; dyed; marked or stained with some colour.

Had the tunicles and humours of the eye been colorate, many rays from visible objects would have been stopt. Ray.

COLORA'TION. n. s. [coloro, Lat.]

1. The art or practice of colouring.

Some bodies have a more departable nature than others, as is evident in coloration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a great quantity of brasil. Bacon.

2. The state of being coloured.

Amongst curiosities I shall place coloration, though somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their pre-eminence. Bacon's Nat. Hist

COLORI'FICK. adj. [colorificus, Lat.] That which has the power of producing dyes, tints, colours, or hues.

In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorifick qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Opticks.

COLO'SSE. } n. s. [colossus, Lat.] A
COLO'SSUS. } statue of enormous magnitude.

Not to mention the walls and palace of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, or colosse of Rhodes. Temple.

CO'LOUR. n. s. [color, Lat.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; dye.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed. Watts.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakesp.

For though our eyes can nought but colours see,
Yet colours give them not their power of sight. Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton's Opticks.

2. The freshness or appearance of blood in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden

3. The tint of the painter.

When each bold figure just begins to live,
The treach'rous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away. Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false shew.

Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer. Shakesp.

CO'MELY. adj. [from become; or from cpeman, Sax. to please.]

1. Graceful; decent; having dignity or grandeur of mein or look. Comeliness seems to be that species of beauty which excites respect rather than pleasure.

If the principal part of beauty is in decent motion, no marvel though persons in years seem many times more amiable; for no youth can be comely but by pardon, and considering the youth as to make up the comeliness. Bacon.

He that is comely, when old and decrepit, surely was very beautiful when he was young. South.

Thou art a comely, young, and valiant knight.
Dryden.

2. Used of things, decent; according to propriety.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it. Shak. As you like it.

This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying confusion. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

CO'MELY. adv. [from the adjective.] Handsomely; gracefully.

To ride comely, to play at all weapons, to dance comely, be very necessary for a courtly gentleman.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

CO'MER. n. s. [from come.] One that comes.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewel goes out sighing.
Shakesp. Troil. and Cress.

Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair,
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Plants move upwards; but, if the sap puts up too fast, it maketh a slender stalk, which will not support the weight; and therefore these are all swift and hasty comers. Bacon.

It is natural to be kind to the last comer.
L'Estrange.

Now leave those joys, unsuiting to thy age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage. Dryden.

The renowned champion of our lady of Loretto, and the miraculous translation of her chapel; about which he hath published a defiance to the world, and offers to prove it against all comers.
Stillingfleet.

There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer. Locke.

House and heart are open for a friend; the passage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer. South.

CO'MET. n. s. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.] A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun; and being very long and eccentrick, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and barred comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phænomena of the several. Thus, when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbutus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtilest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Trevoux. Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wond'rous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy?
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

Such his fell glances as the fatal light
Of staring comets. Crashaw.

I considered a comet, or in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison's Guardian.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright.
Prior.

CO'METARY. } adj. [from comet.] Re-
COMETICK. } lating to a comet.

Refractions of light are in the planetary and cometary regions, as on our globe.

He erreth in this, to think that actions, proceeding from fear, are properly compulsory actions; which, in truth, are not only voluntary, but free actions; neither compelled, nor so much as physically necessitated. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Kindly it would be taken to comply with a patent, although not compulsory. Swift.

COMPU'NCTION. n. s. [componction, Fr. from pungo, punctum to prick, Lat.]

1. The power of pricking; stimulation; irritation.

This is that acid and piercing spirit, which, with such activity and compunction, invadeth the brains and nostrils of those that receive it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. The state of being pricked by the conscience; repentance; contrition.

He acknowledged his disloyalty to the king, with expressions of great compunction. Clarendon.

COMPU'NCTIOUS. adj. [from compunction.] Repentant; sorrowful; tender.

Stop up th' access and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose. Shakesp. Macbeth.

COMPU'NCTIVE. adj. [from compunction.] Causing remorse.

COMPURGA'TION. n. s. [compurgatio, Lat.] The practice of justifying any man's veracity by the testimony of another.

COMPURGA'TOR. n. s. [Lat.] One who bears his testimony to the credibility of another.

The next quarry, or chalk-pit, will give abundant attestation: these are so obvious, that I need not be far to seek for a compurgator. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

COMPU'TABLE. adj. [from compute.] Capable of being numbered or computed.

If, instead of twenty-four letters, there were twenty-four millions, as those twenty-four millions are a finite number, so would all combinations thereof be finite, though not easily computable by arithmetick. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

COMPUTA'TION. n. s. [from compute.]

1. The act of reckoning; calculation.

My princely father
Then, by just computation of the time,
Found that the issue was not his. Shak. Rich. III.

2. The sum collected or settled by calculation.

We pass for women of fifty: many additional years are thrown into female computations of this nature. Addison's Guardian.

To* COMPU'TE. v. a. [computo, Lat.] To reckon; to calculate; to number; to count.

Compute how much water would be requisite to lay the earth under water. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Where they did compute by weeks, yet still the year was measured by months Holder on Time.

Alas! not dazzled with their noon-tide ray,
Compute the morn and ev'ning to the day;
The whole amount of that enormous fame,
A tale that blends their glory with their shame. Pope.

COMPU'TE. n. s. [computus, Lat.] Computation; calculation.

Though there were a fatality in this year, yet divers were out in their account, aberring several ways from the true and just compute; and calling that one year which perhaps might be another. Brown's Vulg. Err.

COMPU'TER. n. s. [from compute.] Reckoner; accountant; calculator.

The kalendars of these computers, and the accounts of these days, are different. Br. Vulg. Err.

I have known some such ill computers, as to imagine the many millions in stocks so much real wealth. Swift.

CO'MPUTIST. n. s. [computiste, Fr.] Calculator; one skilled in the art of numbers or computation.

The treasurer was a wise man, and a strict computist. Wotton.

We conceive we have a year in three hundred and sixty-five days exact: computists tell us, that we escape six hours. Brown.

CO'MRADE. n. s. [camerade, Fr. from camera a chamber; one that lodges in the same chamber, contubernio fruitur.]

1. One who dwells in the same house or chamber.

Rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl.
Shakesp. King Lear.

2. A companion; a partner in any labour or danger.

He permitted them
To put out both thine eyes, and fetter'd send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses, thy comrades,
As good for nothing else. Milton's Agonistes.

A footman, being newly married, desired his comrade to tell him freely what the town said of it. Swift.

CON. A Latin inseparable preposition, which, at the beginning of words, signifies union or association: as concourse, a running together; to convene, to come together.

CON. [abbreviated from contra against, Lat.] A cant word for one who is on the negative side of a question; as, the pros and cons.

To* CON. v. a. [connan, Sax. to know; as, in Chaucer, Old wymen connen mochil thinge; that is, Old women have much knowledge.]

1. To know.

Of muses, Hobbinol, I conne no skill
Enough to me to paint out my unrest. Spens. Past.

2. To study; to commit to memory; to fix in the mind. It is a word now little in use, except in ludicrous language.

Pretty answers! have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths wives, and conn'd them out of rings? Shakesp.

Here are your parts; and I am to entreat you to con them by to-morrow night.
Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

Our understanding cannot in this body arrive so clearly to the knowledge of God, and things invisible, as by orderly conning over the visible and inferiour creatures. Milton.

Shew it him written; and, having the other also written in the paper, shew him that, after he has conned the first, and require it of him. Holder's Elements of Speech.

The books of which I'm chiefly fond,
Are such as you have whilom conn'd. Prior.

All this while John had conned over such a catalogue of hard words, as were enough to conjure up the devil. Arbuthnot.

3. To con Thanks; an old expression for to thank. It is the same with sçavoir grè.

I con him no thanks for 't, in the nature he delivers it. Shakesp.

To* CONCA'MERATE. v. a. [concamero, Lat.] To arch over; to vault; to lay concave over.

Of the upper beak, an inch and a half consisteth of one concamerated bone, bended downwards, and toothed as the other. Grew's Museum.

CONCAMERA'TION. n. s. [from concamerate.] Arch; vault.

What a romance is the story of those impossible concamerations, and feigned rotations of solid orbs! Glanville's Scepsis.

To* CONCATE'NATE. v. a. [from catena, Lat. a chain.] To link together; to unite in a successive order.

CONCATENA'TION. n. s. [from concatenate.] A series of links; an uninterrupted unvariable succession.

The stoicks affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching to the elicit acts of man's will. South.

CONCAVA'TION. n. s. [from concave.] The act of making concave.

CONCA'VE. adj. [concavus, Lat.]

1. Hollow without angles; as, the inner surface of an eggshell, the inner curve of an arch: opposed to convex.

These great fragments falling hollow, inclosed under their concave surface a great deal of air. Burnet's Theory.

2. Hollow.

Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath his banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds
Made in his concave shores? Shak. Julius Cæsar.

For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a worm-eaten nut. Shakesp. As you like it.

CONCA'VENESS. n. s. [from concave.] Hollowness. Dict.

CONCA'VITY. n. s. [from concave.] Internal surface of a hollow spherical or spheroidical body.

Niches that contain figures of white marble should not be coloured in their concavity too black. Wotton.

They have taken the impresses of these shells with that exquisite niceness, that no metal, when melted and cast in a mould, can ever possibly represent the concavity of that mould with greater exactness than these flints do the concavities of the shells, wherein they were moulded. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

CONCAVO-CONCAVE. adj. Concave or hollow on both sides.

CONCAVO-CONVEX. adj. [from concave and convex.] Concave one way, and convex the other.

I procured another concavo-convex plate of glass, ground on both sides to the same sphere with the former plate. Newton.

A concavo-convex pentangular plate, part of a shell that belongs to the entrochus. Woodward on Fossils.

CONCA'VOUS. adj. [concavus, Lat.] Concave; hollow without angles.

CONCA'VOUSLY. adv. [from concavous.] With hollowness; in such a manner as discovers the internal surface of a hollow sphere.

The dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To* CONCE'AL. v. a. [concelo, Lat.] To hide; to keep secret; not to divulge; to cover; not to detect.

He oft finds med'cine, who his grief imparts;
But double griefs afflict concealing hearts. Fairy Q.

Come, Catesby, thou art sworn
As deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart.
Shakesp Richard III.

Ulysses himself adds, he was the most eloquent and the most silent of men: he knew that a word spoke never wrought so much good as a word concealed. Broome.

There is but one way I know of conversing safely with all men, that is, not by concealing what we say or do, but by saying or doing nothing that deserves to be concealed. Pope.

CONCE'ALABLE. adj. [from conceal.] Capable of being concealed; possible to be kept secret, or hid.

Returning a lye unto his Maker, and presuming to put off the searcher of hearts, he denied the omniscience of God, whereunto there is nothing concealable. Brown's Vulgar Err.

CONCEALEDNESS. n. s. [from conceal.] The state of being concealed; privacy; obscurity. Dict.

CONCEA'LER. n. s. [from conceal.] He that conceals any thing.

They were to undergo the penalty of forgery, and the concealer of the crime was equally guilty. Clarendon.

CONCEALMENT. n. s. [from conceal.]

1. The act of hiding; secrecy.

She never told her love;
But let concealment, like a worm i' th' bud,
Feed on her damask cheek. Shak. Tw. Night.

He is a worthy gentleman,
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange concealments. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Few own such sentiments; yet this concealment derives rather from the fear of man than of any Being above. Glanville.

2. The state of being hid; privacy; delitescence.

A person of great abilities is zealous for the good of mankind, and as solicitous for the concealment as the performance of illustrious actions. Addison's Freeholder.

3. Hiding-place; retreat; cover; shelter.

The choice of this holy name, as the most effectual concealment of a wicked design, supposes mankind satisfied that nothing but what is just is directed by the principles of it. Rogers.

The cleft tree
Offers its kind concealment to a few,
Their food its insects, and its moss their nests. Thomson.

To CONCE'DE. v. a. [concedo, Lat.] To yield; to admit; to grant; to let pass undisputed.

By expurgatory animadversions we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and, having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown.

This must not be conceded without limitation. Boyle.

The atheist, if you concede to him that fortune may be an agent, doth presume himself safe and invulnerable. Bentley.

CONCEIT. n. s. [concept, Fr. conceptus, Lat.]

1. Conception; thought; idea; image in the mind.

Here the very shepherds have their fancies lifted to so high conceits, as the learned of other nations are content both to borrow their names, and imitate their cunning. Sidney.

Impossible it was, that ever their will should change or incline to remit any part of their duty, without some object having force to avert their conceit from God. Hooker.

His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning:
There 's some conceit, or other, likes him well,
When that he bids good-morrow with such spirit. Shakesp.

In laughing there ever precedeth a conceit of somewhat ridiculous, and therefore it is proper to man. Bacon's Natural Hist.

2. Understanding; readiness of apprehension.

How often, alas! did her eyes say unto me, that they 'loved! and yet I, not looking for such a matter, had not my conceit open to understand them. Sidney.

The first kind of things appointed by laws humane, containeth whatsoever is good or evil, is notwithstanding more secret than that it can be discerned by every man's present conceit, without some deeper discourse and judgment. Hooker.

I shall be found of a quick conceit in judgment, and shall be admired. Wisdom, viii. 11.

3. Opinion, generally in a sense of contempt; fancy; imagination; fantastical notion.

I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself
Yields to the theft. Shakesp. King Lear.

Strong conceit, like a new principle, carries all easily with it, when yet above common sense. Locke.

Malbranche has an odd conceit,
As ever enter'd Frenchman's pate. Prior.

4. Opinion, in a neutral sense.

Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit?
There is more hope of a fool than of him. Proverbs, xxv. 12.

I shall not fail t' approve the fair conceit
The king hath of you. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

5. Pleasant fancy; gaiety of imagination; acuteness.

His wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard: there is no more conceit in him than is in a mallet. Shakesp. Henry IV.

While he was on his way to the gibbet, a freak took him in the head to go off with a conceit. L'Estrange.

6. Sentiment, as distinguished from imagery.

Some to conceit alone their works confine,
And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at ev'ry line. Pope.

7. Fondness; favourable opinion; opinionative pride.

Since by a little studying in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion; may he find it again by harder study, under humbler truth. Bentley.

8. Out of Conceit with. No longer fond of.

Not that I dare assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson, Preface.

What hath chiefly put me out of conceit with this moving manner, is the frequent disappointment. Swift.

To CONCE'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To conceive; to imagine; to think; to believe.

One of two bad ways you must conceit me,
Either a coward, or a flatterer. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.

They looked for great matters at their hands, in a cause which they conceited to be for the liberty of the subject Bacon.

He conceits himself to be struck at, when he is not so much as thought of. L'Estrange.

The strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered as unactive, and consequently as useless, as if they really were so. South's Sermons.

CONCE'ITED. particip. adj. [from conceit.]

1. Endowed with fancy.

He was of countenance amiable, of feature comely, active of body, pleasantly conceited, and sharp of wit. Knolles.

2. Proud; fond of himself; opinionative; affected; fantastical.

There is another extreme in obscure writers, which some empty conceited heads are apt to run into, out of a prodigality of words, and a want of sense. Felton on the Classicks.

If you think me too conceited,
Or to passion quickly heated. Swift.

What you write of me, would make me more conceited than what I scribble myself. Pope.

3. With of before the object of conceit.

Every man is building a several way, impotently conceited of his own model and his own materials. Dryden.

If we consider how vitious and corrupt the Athenians were, how conceited of their own wit, science, and politeness. Bentley.

CONCE'ITEDLY. adv. [from conceited.] Fancifully; whimsically.

'Conceitedly dress her, and be assign'd
By you fit place for every flower and jewel:
Make her for love fit fuel. Donne.

CONCE'ITEDNESS. n. s. [from conceited.] Pride; opinionativeness; fondness of himself.

When men think none worthy esteem, but such as claim under their own pretences, partiality and conceitedness make them give the pre-eminence. Collier on Pride.

CONCE'ITLESS. adj. [from conceit.] Stupid; without thought; dull of apprehension.

Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flattery. Shakesp. Two Gent. of Verona.

CONCE'IVABLE. adj. [from conceive.]

1. That may be imagined or thought.

If it were possible to contrive an invention, whereby any conceivable weight may be moved by any conceivable power, with the same quickness, without other instrument, the works of nature would be too much subject to art. Wilkins.

2. That may be understood or believed.

The freezing of the words in the air, in the Northern climes, is as conceivable as this strange union. Glanville's Scepsis.

It is not conceivable, that it should be indeed that very person, whose shape and voice it assumed. Atterbury's Sermons.

CONCE'IVABLENESS. n. s [from conceivable.] The quality of being conceivable. Dict.

CONCE'IVABLY. adv. [from conceivable.] In a conceivable or intelligible manner.

To CONCEIVE. v. a. [concevoir, Fr. concipere, Lat.]

I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. Psalm li. 5.

2. To form in the mind; to imagine.

Nebuchadnezzar hath conceived a purpose against you. Jeremiah.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception, is in the clouds. Wotton.

3. To comprehend; to understand: as, he conceives the whole system.

This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive, and fare thee well. Shak. King Lear.

4. To think; to be of opinion.

If you compare my gentleman with Sir John, you will hardly conceive him to have been bred in the same climate. Swift.

To CONCE'IVE. v. n.

1. To think; to have an idea of.

The griev'd commons
Hardly conceive of me: let it be nois'd,
That, through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

O what avails me now that honour high,
To have conceiv'd of God! or that salute,
Hail, highly favour'd, among women blest! Milt.

Conceive of things clearly and distinctly in their own natures; conceive of things completely in all their parts; conceive of things comprehensively in all their properties and relations; conceive of things extensively in all their kinds; conceive of things orderly, or in a proper method. Watts's Logick.

2. To become pregnant.

The flocks should conceive when they came to drink. Genesis.

The beauteous maid, whom he beheld, possess'd;
Conceiving as she slept, her fruitful womb
Swell'd with the founder of immortal Rome. Addis.

CONCE'IVER. n. s. [from conceive.] One that understands or apprehends.

Though hereof prudent symbols and pious allegories be made by wiser conceivers, yet common heads will fly unto superstitious applications. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CONCE'NT. n. s. [concentus, Lat.]

1. Concert of voices; harmony; concord of sound.

It is to be considered, that whatsoever virtue is in numbers, for conducing to concent of notes, is rather to be ascribed to the ante-number than to the entire number Bacon.

2. Consistency.

Reasons borrowed from nature and the schoolmen, as subservient mediums, carry a musick and concent to that which God hath said in his word. Dr. Maine.

'Tis in concent to his own principles, which allow no merit, no intrinsick worth, to accompany one state more than another. Atterbury.

To CONCE'NTRATE. v. a. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Lat.] To drive into a narrow compass; to drive towards the centre: contrary to expand or dilate.

Spirit of vinegar, concentrated and reduced to its greatest strength, will coagulate the serum. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONCENTRA'TION. n. s. [from concentrate.] Collection into a narrow space round the centre; compression into a narrow compass.

All circular bodies, that receive a concentration of the light, must be shadowed in a circular manner. Peacham on Drawing.

To CONCE'NTRE. v. n. [concentrer, Fr. from con and centrum, Lat.] To tend to one common centre: to have the same centre with something else.

The bricks having first been formed in a circular mould, and then cut, before their burning, into four quarters or more, the sides afterwards join so closely, and the points concentre so exactly, that the pillars appear one intire piece. Wotton.

All these are like so many lines drawn from several objects, that some way relate to him, and concentre in him. Hale.

To CONCE'NTRE. v. a. To direct or contract towards one centre.

The having a part less to animate, will serve to concentre the spirits, and make them more active in the rest. Decay of Piety

In the concentring all their precious beams
Of sacred influence! Milton

CONCE'NTRICAL. } adj. [concentricus, Lat.]
CONCE'NTRICK. } Having one common centre.

If, as in water stirr'd, more circles be
Produc'd by one, love such additions take;
Those, like so many spheres, but one heav'n make,
For they are all concentrick unto thee. Donne.

Any substance, pitched steady upon two points, as on an axis, and moving about on that axis, also describes a circle concentrick to the axis. Moxon's Mechanick Exercises.

If the crystalline humour had been concentrical to the sclerotes, the eye would not have admitted a whole hemisphere at one view. Ray on the Creat.

If a stone be thrown into stagnating water, the waves excited thereby continue some time to arise in the place where the stone fell into the water, and are propagated from thence into concentrick circles upon the surface of the water to great distances. Newton's Opticks

The manner of its concretion is by concentrical rings, like those of an onion about the first kernel. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Circular revolutions in concentrick orbs about the sun, or other central body, could in no wise be attained without the power of the Divine arm. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCE'PTACLE. n. s. [conceptaculum, Lat.] That in which any thing is contained; a vessel.

There is at this day resident, in that huge conceptacle, water enough to effect such a deluge. Woodward's Natural History, Preface.

CONCE'PTIBLE. adj. [from concipio, conceptum, Lat.] That may be conceived; intelligible; capable to be understood.

Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the intellective faculty, but are most suitable and easily conceptible by us, because apparent in his works. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCE'PTION. n. s. [conceptio, Lat.]

1. The act of conceiving, or growing quick with pregnancy.

I will greatly multiply thy sorrow by thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children. Genesis, iii. 16.

Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply
By thy conception; children thou shalt bring
In sorrow forth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. The state of being conceived.

Joy had the like conception in our eyes,
And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up. Shakesp.

Our own productions flatter us: it is impossible not to be fond of them at the moment of their conception. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Notion; idea; image in the mind.

As conceptions are the images or resemblances of things to the mind within itself, in the like manner are words or names the marks, tokens, or resemblances of those conceptions to the minds of them whom we converse with. South's Sermons.

Consult the acutest poets and speakers, and they will confess that their quickest, most admired conceptions, were such as darted into their minds, like sudden flashes of lightning, they knew not how, nor whence; and not by any certain consequence, or dependence of one thought upon another, as it is in matters of ratiocination. South's Sermons.

To have right conceptions about them, we must bring our understandings to the inflexible natures and unalterable relations of things, and not endeavour to bring things to any preconceived notions of our own. Locke.

4. Sentiments; purpose.

Thou but remember'st me of my own conception.
I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which
I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakesp. King Lear.

Please your highness, note
His dangerous conception in this point:
Not friended by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

5. Apprehension; knowledge.

And as if beasts conceiv'd what reason were,
And that conception should distinctly show
They should the name of reasonable bear;
For, without reason, none could reason know. Davies.

6. Conceit; sentiment; pointed thought.

He is too flatulent sometimes, and sometimes too dry; many times unequal, and almost always forced, and, besides, is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms; all which are not only below the dignity of heroick verse, but contrary to its nature. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

CONCE'PTIOUS. adj. [conceptum, Lat.] Apt to conceive; fruitful; pregnant.

Common mother,
Ensear thy fertile and conceptious womb;
Let it no more bring out to ingrateful man. Shakesp. Timon.

CONCE'PTIVE. adj. [conceptum, Lat.] Capable to conceive.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of this simple they may be reduced into a conceptive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To CONCE'RN. v. a. [concerner, Fr. concerno, low Lat.]

1. To relate to; to belong to.

Exclude the use of natural reasoning about the sense of holy scripture, concerning the articles of our faith; and then, that the scripture doth concern the articles of our faith, who can assure us? Hooker.

Count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of concerns him. Shakesp.

Gracious things
Thou hast reveal'd; those chiefly which concern
Just Abraham, and his seed. Milton's Par. Lost.

This place concerns not at all the dominion of one brother over the other. Locke.

2. To affect with some passion; to touch nearly; to be of importance to.

I would not
The cause were known to them it most concerns. Shakesp.

Our wars with France have affected us in our most tender interests, and concerned us more than those with any other nation. Addison on the War.

It much concerns them not to suffer the king to establish his authority on this side. Addison on Italy.

The more the authority of any station in society is extended, the more it concerns publick happiness that it be committed to men fearing God. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To interest; to engage by interest.

I knew a young negroe who was sick of the small-pox: I found by enquiry, at a person's concerned for him, that the little tumours left whitish specks behind them. Boyle on Colours.

Above the rest two goddesses appear,
Concern'd for each; here Venus, Juno there. Dryden's Æneid.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places. South's Sermons.

Whatever past actions it cannot reconcile, or appropriate to that present self by consciousness, it can be no more concerned in than if they had never been done. Locke.

They think themselves out of the reach of providence, and no longer concerned to solicit his favour. Rogers.

4. To disturb; to make uneasy.

In one compressing engine I shut a sparrow, without forcing any air in; and in an hour the bird began to pant, and be concerned, and in less than an hour and a half to be sick. Derham.

5. To concern himself. To intermeddle; to be busy.

Being a layman, I ought not to have concerned myself with speculations which belong to the profession. Dryden.

CONCE'RN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Business; affair: considered as relating to some one.

Let early care thy main concerns secure,
Things of less moment may delays endure. Denham.

This manner of exposing the private concerns of families, and sacrificing the secrets of the dead to the curiosity of the living, is one of those licentious practices, which might well deserve the animadversion of our government. Addis. Freeholder.

A Heathen emperor said, if the gods were offended, it was their own concern, and they were able to vindicate themselves. Swift.

Religion is no trifling concern, to be performed in any careless and superficial manner. Rogers.

2. Interest; engagement.

No plots th' alarm to his retirements give;
'Tis all mankind's concern that he should live. Dryden.

When we speak of the conflagration of the world, these have no concern in the question. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Importance; moment.

Mysterious secrets of a high concern,
And weighty truths, solid convincing sense,
Explain'd by unaffected eloquence. Roscommon.

The mind is stunned and dazzled amidst that variety of objects: she cannot apply herself to those things which are of the utmost concern to her. Addison's Spectator.

4. Passion; affection; regard.

Ah, what concerns did both your souls divide!
Your honour gave us what your love denied.
Dryden.

O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concerns,
And gentle wishes, follow me to battle.
Addison's Cato.

Why all this concern for the poor? We want them not, as the country is now managed: where the plough has no work, one family can do the business of fifty. Swift.

If therefore they will appeal to revelation for their creation, they must be concluded by it.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He never refused to be concluded by the authority of one legally summoned. Atterbury.

To CONCLU'DE. v. n.

1. To perform the last act of ratiocination; to collect the consequence; to determine.

For why should we the busy soul believe,
When boldly she concludes of that and this;
When of herself she can no judgment give,
Nor how, nor whence, nor where, nor what she is? Davies.

The blind man's relations import no necessity of concluding, that though black was the roughest of colours, therefore white should be the smoothest. Boyle on Colours.

There is something infamous in the very attempt: the world will conclude I had a guilty conscience. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

2. To settle opinion.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability as our author has done, because, in a single notion, no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubtings? Atterbury.

I question not but your translation will do honour to our country; for I conclude of it already from those performances. Addison to Pope.

3. Finally to determine.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a goodly peace concluded of
Between the realms of England and of France.
Shakesp.

4. To end.

And all around wore nuptial bonds, the ties
Of love's assurance, and a train of lyes,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries.
Dryden's Fables.

We'll tell when 'tis enough,
Or if it wants the nice concluding bout. King.

CONCLU'DENCY. n. s. [from concludent.] Consequence; regular proof; logical deduction of reason.

Judgment concerning things to be known, or the neglect and concludency of them, ends in decision. Hale.

CONCLU'DENT. adj. [from conclude] Decisive; ending in just and undeniable consequences.

Though these kind of arguments may seem more obscure, yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and concludent to my purpose. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCLU'DINGLY. adv. [from conclude.] With uncontrovertible evidence.

Examine whether the opinion you meet with, repugnant to what you were formerly embued with, be concludingly demonstrated or not Digby.

CONCLU'SIBLE. adj. [from conclude.] Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly conclusible from God's prescience, that they will voluntarily do this, as that they will do it at all. Hammond.

CONCLU'SION. n. s. [from conclude.]

1. Determination; final decision.

Ways of peace and conclusion there are but these two certain; the one a sentence of judicial decision, given by authority thereto appointed within ourselves; the other, the like kind of sentence given by a more universal authority. Hooker.

2. The collection from propositions premised; the consequence.

The conclusion of experience, from the time past to the time present, will not be sound and perfect. Bacon's War with Spain.

And marrying divers principles and grounds,
Out of their match a true conclusion brings. Davies.

Then doth the wit
Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds;
Then doth it fly the good, and ill pursue. Davies.

I only deal by rules of art,
Such as are lawful, and judge by
Conclusions of astrology. Hudibras.

It is of the nature of principles, to yield a conclusion different from themselves. Tillotson.

He granted him both the major and the minor; but denied him the conclusion.
Addison's Freeholder.

CONCLU'SIVENESS n. s. [from conclusive.] Power of determining the opinion; regular consequence.

Consideration of things to be known, of their several weights, conclusiveness, or evidence.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To CONCOA'GULATE. v. a. [from con and coagulate.] To curdle or congeal one thing with another.

The saline parts of those, upon their solution by the rain, may work upon those other substances, formerly concoagulated with them.
Boyle's Experiments.

They do but coagulate themselves, with concoagulating with them any water.
Boyle's History of Firmness.

CONCOAGU'LATION. n. s. [from concoagulate.] A coagulation by which different bodies are joined in one mass.

To CONCO'CT. v. a. [concoquo, Lat.]

1. To digest by the stomach, so as to turn food to nutriment.

The working of purging medicines cometh two or three hours after the medicines taken; for that the stomach first maketh a proof, whether it can concoct them. Bacon.

Assuredly he was a man of a feeble stomach, unable to concoct any great fortune, prosperous or adverse. Hayward.

The vital functions are performed by general and constant laws: the food is concocted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play.
Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

The notions and sentiments of others judgment, as well as of our own memory, makes our property: it does, as it were, concoct our intellectual food, and turns it into a part of ourselves.
Watts on the Mind.

2. To purify or sublime by heat; to heighten to perfection.

The small close-lurking minister of fate,
Whose high concocted venom through the veins
A rapid lightning darts. Thomson's Summer.

3. To ripen.

The root which continueth ever in the earth, is still concocted by the earth; and fruits and grains are half a year in concocting, whereas leaves are out and perfect in a month. Bacon.

CONCO'CTION. n. s. [from concoct.] Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing towards purity and perfection.

This hard rolling is between concoction and a simple maturation. Bacon's Natural History.

The constantest notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process.
Bacon's Natural History.

He, though he knew not which soul spake,
Because both meant, both spake the same,
Might thence a new concoction take,
And part far purer than he came. Donne.

CONCOLOUR. adj. [concolor. Lat.] Of one colour; without variety.

In concolour animals, and such as are confined unto the same colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a crow or blackbird grow white we account it more pretty. Brown.

CONCO'MITANCE. } n. s. [from concomi-
CONCO'MITANCY. } tor, Lat.] Subsistence together with another thing.

The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Brown.

To argue from a concomitancy to a causality, is not infallibly conclusive. Glanville's Scepsis.

CONCO'MITANT. adj. [concomitans, Lat.] Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causitive or consequential.

The spirit that furthereth the extension or dilatation of bodies, and is ever concomitant with porosity and dryness. Bacon.

It has pleased our wise Creator to annex to several objects, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure; and that in several objects, to several degrees. Locke.

CONCO'MITANT. n. s. Compsnion; person or thing collaterally connected.

These effects are, from the local motion of the air, a concomitant of the sound, and not from the sound. Bacon.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heir apparent and only son, in a journey of much adventure. Wotton.

In consumptions, the preternatural concomitants, an universal heat of the body, a torminous diarrhœa, and hot distillations, have all a corrosive quality. Harvey on Consumptions.

The other concomitant of ingratitude is hardheartedness, or want of compassion. South's Serm.

Horror stalks around,
Wild staring, and his sad concomitant
Despair, of abject look. Philips.

Reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as satires and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph. Addison.

And for tobacco, who could bear it?
Filthy concomitant of claret! Prior.

Where antecedents, concomitants and consequents, causes and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer. Watts.

CONCO'MITANTLY. adv. [from concomitant.] In company with others. Dict.

To CONCO'MITATE. v. a. [concomitatus, Lat.] To be collaterally connected with any thing; to come and go with another.

Uproar the universal peace. Shaksp. Macbeth.

What concord hath Christ with Belial? 2. Cor. vi. 15.

One shall rise
Of proud ambitious heart, who not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over his brethren, and quite dispossess
Concord and law of nature from the earth. Milton.

Unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion; such as, to set forth
Great things by small, if, nature's concord broke,
Among the constellations war were sprung. Milton.

Kind concord, heavenly born! whose blissful reign
Holds this vast globe in one surrounding chain;
Soul of the world! Tickel.

CON'CREMENT. n. s. [from concresco, Lat.] The mass formed by concretion; a collection of matter growing together.

There is the cohesion of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the concrement of a pebble or flint. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONCRE'SCENSE. n. s. [from concresco, Lat.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor inchoate, how any other substance should thence take concrescence, hath not been taught. Raleigh's History of the World.

To CONCRETE. [concresco, Lat.] To coalesce into one mass; to grow by the union and cohesion of parts.

The mineral or metallick matter, thus concreting with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it. Woodward.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances, in rank and file. Newton.

The blood of some who died of the plague could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction begun. Arbuthnot.

To CONCRE'TE. v. a. To form by concretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferiour world divers bodies, that are concreted out of others, is beyond all dispute: we see it in the meteors. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CO'NCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface, of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state. Burnet.

2. [In logick.] Not abstract: applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is, whereby those concrete names, God and man, when we speak of Christ, do take interchangeably one another's room; so that, for truth of speech, it skilleth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it; or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save, the world. Hooker.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality do also either express, or imply, or refer to some subject to which it belongs; as white, round, long, broad, wise, mortal, living, dead: but these are not always noun adjectives in a grammatical sense; for a knave, a fool, a philosopher, and many other concretes, are substantives, as well as knavery, folly, and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them. Watts's Logick.

CO'NCRETE. n. s. A mass formed by concretion; or, union of various parts adhering to each other.

If gold itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCRE'TELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractly.

Sin, considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependance of it upon the will as serves to render th agent guilty. Norris.

CONCRE'TENESS. n. s. from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass. Dict.

2. Indistinctly; one mingled with another.

The inner court with horror, noise, and tears Confus'dly fill'd; the women's shrieks and cries
The arched vaults re-echo. Denham.

On mount Vesuvius next he fix'd his eyes,
And saw the smoaking tops confus'dly rise;
A hideous ruin! Addison on Italy.

I viewed through a prism, and saw them most confusedly defined, so that I could not distinguish their smaller parts from one another. Newton's Opticks.

Heroes and heroines shouts confus'dly rise,
And base and treble voices strike the skies. Pope.

3. Not clearly; not plainly.

He confusedly and obscurely delivered his opinion. Clarendon.

4. Tumultuously: hastily; not deliberately; not exactly.

The propriety of thoughts and words, which are the hidden beauties of a play, are but confusedly judged in the vehemence of action. Dryd.

CONFU'SEDNESS. n. s. [from confused.] Want of distinctness; want of clearness.

Hither unto these titles of honour carry a kind of confusedness, and rather betokened a successive office than an established dignity. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The cause of the confusedness of our notions, next to the natural inability, is want of attention. Norris.

CONFU'SION. n. s. [from confuse.]

1. Irregular mixture; tumultuous medley.

God, only wise, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues confusion was to ruin brought. Davies.

2. Tumult; disorder.

God is not a God of sedition and confusion, but of order and of peace. Hooker, Preface.

This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets
Crying confusion. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

3. Indistinct combination.

The confusion of two different ideas, which a customary connexion of them in their minds hath made to them almost one, fills their heads with false views, and their reasonings with false consequences. Locke.

4. Overthrow; destruction.

The strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him in to his confusion. Shakesp. Mac.

5. Astonishment; distraction of mind; hurry of ideas.

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,
And fear in ev'ry heart,
When waves on waves, and gulphs in gulphs,
O'ercame the pilot's art. Spectator.

CONFU'TABLE. adj. [from confute.] Possible to be disproved; possible to be shewn false.

At the last day, that inquisitor shall not present to God a bundle of calumnies, or confutable accusations; but will offer unto his omniscience a true list of our transgressions. Brown.

CONFUTA'TION. n. s. [confutatio, Lat.] The act of confuting; disproof.

A confutation of atheism from the frame of the world. Bentley.

To CONFU'TE. v. a. [confuto, Lat.] To convict of errour or falsehood; to disprove.

He could on either side dispute;
Confute, change hands, and still confute. Hudibras.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live as if there were none, but, when he dies, to find himself confuted in the flames, must be the height of woe. South.

CO'NGE. n. s. [congé, Fr.]

1. Act of reverence; bow; courtesy.

The captain salutes you with congé profound,
And your ladyship curt'sies half way to the ground. Swift.

2. Leave; farewell.

So courteous congé both did give and take,
With right hands plighted, pledges of good-will. Fairy Queen.

To CO'NGE. v. n. [from the noun.] To take leave.

I have congeed with the duke, and done my adieu with his nearest. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

CO'NGED'ELIRE is French; and signifies, in common law, the king's permission royal to a dean and chapter, in time of vacation, to chuse a bishop. The king, as sovereign patron of all archbishopricks, bishopricks, and other ecclesiastical benefices, had in ancient times the free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities; investing them first per baculum & annulum, and afterwards by his letters patent. In process of time he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should, at every vacation, before they chuse, demand of the king a congé d'elire, that is, licence to proceed to election. Cowell.

A woman, when she has made her own choice, for form's sake, sends a congé d'elire to her friends. Spectator.

CO'NGE. n. s. [In architecture.] A moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another: such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture. Chambers.

To CONGE'AL. v. a. [congelo, Lat.]

1. To turn, by frost, from a fluid to a solid state.

What more miraculous thing may be told,
That ice which is congeal'd with senseless cold,
Should kindle fire by wonderful device? Spenser.

In whose capacious womb
A vapoury deluge lies, to snow congeal'd. Thomson's Winter.

2. To bind or fix, as by cold.

Oh, gentlemen, see! see! dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood. Shakesp.

To CONGE'AL. v. n. To concrete; to gather into a mass by cold.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, into which put quicksilver wrapt in linen, and it will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon.

When water congeals, the surface of the ice is smooth and level, as the surface of the water was before. Burnet's Theory.

CONGE'ALMENT. n. s. [from congeal.] The clot formed by congelation; concretion.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

CONGE'LABLE. adj. [from congeal.] Susceptible of congelation; capable of losing its fluidity.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers: dense, rare, tangible, pneumatical, fixed, hard, soft, congelable, not congelable, liquefiable, not liquefiable. Bacon.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fixable in the fire, and congelable again by cold into brittle glebes or crystals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONGELA'TION. n. s. [from congeal.]

1. The act of turning fluids to solids by cold.

The capillary tubes are obstructed either by outward compression or congelation of the fluid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

There are congelations of the redundant water, precipitations, and many other operations. Arbuthnot on Air.

2. State of being congealed, or made solid by cold.

Many waters and springs will never freeze; and many parts in rivers and lakes, where there are mineral eruptions, will still persist without congelation. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

CO'NGENER. n. s. [Lat.] Of the same kind or nature.

The cherry-tree has been often grafted on the laurel, to which it is a congener. Miller.

CONGENE'ROUS. adj. [congener, Lat.] Of the same kind; arising from the same original.

Those bodies, being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their nature. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

From extreme and lasting colds proceeds a great run of apoplexies, and other congenerous diseases. Arbuthnot on Air.

CONGE'NEROUSNESS. n. s. [from congenerous.] The quality of being from the same original; belonging to the same class. Dict.

CONGE'NIAL. adj. [con and genus, Lat.] Partaking of the same genius; kindred; cognate: in Swift it is followed by with.

He sprung, without any help, by a kind of congenial composure, as we may term it, to the likeness of our late sovereign and master. Wotton.

You look with pleasure on those things which are somewhat congenial, and of a remote kindred to your own conceptions. Dryden's Dedicat. of Juv.

Smit with the love of sister arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

He acquires a courage, and stiffness of opinion, not at all congenial with him. Swift.

CONGENIA'LITY. n. s. [from congenial.] Participation of the same genius; cognation of mind, or nature.

CONGE'NIALNESS. n. s. [from congenial.] Cognation.

CONGE'NITE. adj. [congenitus, Lat.] Of the same birth; born with another; connate; begotten together.

Many conclusions of moral and intellectual truths, seem, upon this account, to be congenite with us, connatural to us, and engraven in the very frame of the soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Did we learn an alphabet in our embryo-state? And how comes it to pass, that we are not aware of any such congenite apprehensions? Glanv. Scep.

CO'NGER. n. s. [congrus, Lat.] The sea-eel.

Many fish, whose shape and nature are much like the eel, frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as the mighty conger, taken often in the Severn. Walton's Angler.

CONGE'RIES. n. s. [Lat.] A mass of small bodies heaped up together.

The air is nothing but a congeries or heap of small, and for the most part of flexible, particles, of several sizes, and of all kinds of figures. Boyle.

We see on them the emperor and general officers, standing as they distributed a congiary to the soldiers or people. Addison.

To CONGLA'CIATE. v. n. [conglaciatus, Lat.] To turn to ice.

No other doth properly conglaciate but water: for the determination of quicksilver is properly fixation, and that of milk coagulation. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

CONGLACIA'TION. n. s. [from conglaciate.] The state of being changed, or act of changing, into ice.

If crystal be a stone, it is concreted by a mineral spirit, and lapidifical principles; for, while it remained in a fluid body, it was a subject very unfit for proper conglaciation. Brown.

To CO'NGLOBATE. v. a. [conglobatus, Lat.] To gather into a hard firm ball.

The testicle, as is said, is one large conglobated gland, consisting of soft fibres, all in one convolution. Grew.

CO'NGLOBATE. adj. [from the verb.] Moulded into a firm ball, of which the fibres are not distinctly visible.

Fluids are separated from the blood in the liver, and the other conglobate and conglomerate glands. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

CO'NGLOBATELY. adv. [from conglobate.] In a spherical form. Dict.

CONGLOBA'TION. n. s. [from conglobate.] A round body; collection into a round mass.

In this spawn are discerned many specks, or little conglobations, which in time become black. Brown.

To CONGLO'BE. v. a. [conglobo, Lat.] To gather into a round mass; to consolidate in a ball.

Then he founded, then conglob'd
Like things to like. Milton's Paradise Lost.
For all their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around:
Not closer, orb in orb conglob'd, are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen.
Pope's Dunciad.

To CONGLO BE. v. n. To coalesce into a round mass.

Thither they
Hasted with glad precipitance, up-roll'd
As drops on dust conglobing from the dry.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

To CONGLO'MERATE. v. a. [conglomero, Lat.] To gather into a ball, like a ball of thread; to inweave into a round mass.

The liver is one great conglomerated gland, composed of innumerable small glands, each of which consisteth of soft fibres, in a distinct or separate convolution. Grew's Cosmologia.

CONGLO'MERATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Gathered into a round ball, so as that the constitutent parts and fibres are distinct.

Fluids are separated in the liver, and the other conglobate and conglomerate glands. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

2. Collected; twisted together.

The beams of light, when they are multiplied and conglomerate, generate heat. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

CONGLOMERA'TION. n. s. [from conglomerate.]

1. Collection of matter into a loose ball.

Thou that contrivest to murder our dread lord.
Shakesp. Henry VI.
But let the bold conspirator beware:
For heav'n makes princes its peculiar care.
Dryden's Spanish Friar

One put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy against him, together with all the names of the conspirators. South.

To CONSPI'RE. v. n. [conspiro, Lat.]

1. To concert a crime; to plot; to hatch secret treason.

Tell me what they deserve,
That do conspire my death with devilish plots
Of damned witchcraft. Shakesp. Rich. III.

What was it
That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire?
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

They took great indignation, and conspired against the king. Apocrypha.

Let the air be excluded; for that undermineth the body, and conspireth with the spirit of the body to dissolve it. Bacon.

There is in man a natural possibility to destroy the world; that is, to conspire to know no woman. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The press, the pulpit, and the stage,
Conspire to censure and expose our age. Roscom.

2. To agree together: as, all things conspire to make him happy.

So moist and dry, when Phœbus shines,
Conspiring give the plant to grow. Heigh.

CONSPIRER. n. s. [from conspire.] A conspirator; a plotter.

Take no care,
Who chafes, who frets, and where conspirers are:
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be. Shak. Macb.

CONSPIRING Powers. [In mechanicks.] All such as act in direction not opposite to one another. Harris.

CONSPURCATION. n. s. [from conspurco, Lat.] The act of defiling; defilement; pollution.

CO'NSTABLE. n. s. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferiour constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables; because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferiour authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as, constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of the Castle of Carnarvon; but these are properly castellani, or governours of castles. Cowell. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shakesp.

The knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The constable being a sober man, and an enemy to sedition, went to observe what they did. Clarendon.

2. To over-run the Constable. [perhaps from contestable, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth: a low phrase.

CO'NSTABLESHIP. n. s. [from constable.] The office of a constable.

This keepership is annexed to the constableship of the castle, and that granted out in lease. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CO'NSTANCY. n. s. [constantia, Lat.]

1. Immutability; perpetuity; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker.

2. Consistency; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution; firmness; steadiness; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat;
In vain the syrens sing, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty; veracity; reality.

But all the story of the night told over,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shakesp.

CO'NSTANT. adj. [constans, Lat.]

1. Firm; fixed; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle's Hist. of Firmness.

2. Unvaried; unchanged; immutable; durable.

The world's a scene of changes, and to be Constant, in nature were inconstancy. Cowley.

3. Firm; resolute; determined; immovable; unshaken.

Some shrewd contents
Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

4. Free from change of affection.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends. Sidney.

5. Certain; not various; steady; firmly adherent: with to.

Now through the land his care of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd;
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all.
Dryden.

He shewed his firm adherence to religion, as modelled by our national constitution; and was constant to its offices in devotion, both in publick, and in his family. Addis. Freeholder.

CO'NSTANTLY. adv. [from constant.] Unvariably; perpetually; certainly; steadily.

It is strange that the fathers should never appeal; nay, that they should not constantly do it. Tillotson.

To CONSTE'LLATE. v. n. [constellatus, Lat.] To join lustre; to shine with one general light.

The several things which engage our affections do, in a transcendent manner, shine forth and constellate in God. Boyle.

To CONSTE'LLATE. v. a. To unite several shining bodies in one splendour.

Great constitutions, and such as are constellated into knowledge, do nothing till they outdo all. Brown's Vulg. Err.

These scattered perfections, which were divided among the several ranks of inferiour natures, were summed up and constellated in ours. Glanville's Sceptis.

CONSTELLA'TION. n. s. [from constellate.]

1. A cluster of fixed stars.

For the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light. Isaiah, xiii. 10.

The earth, the air, resounded;
The heav'ns and all the constellations rung.
Milton's Parad. Lost.

A constellation is but one;
Though 'tis a train of stars. Dryden.

2. An assemblage of splendours, or excellencies.

The condition is a constellation or conjuncture of all those gospel graces, faith, hope, charity, self-denial, repentance, and the rest. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

CONSTERNATION. n. s. [from consterno, Lat.] Astonishment; amazement; alienation of mind by a surprise; surprise; wonder.

They find the same holy consternation upon themselves that Jacob did at Bethel, which he called the gate of heaven. South.

The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in consternation wait
Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege.
Philips.

To CO'NSTIPATE. v. a. [from constipo, Lat.]

1. To crowd together into a narrow room; to thicken; to condense.

Of cold, the property is to condense and constipate. Bacon.

It may, by amassing, cooling, and constipating of waters, turn them into rain. Ray on the Crea.

There might arise some vertiginous motions or whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms might be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirpools, and there constipate one another into great solid globes. Bentley.

2. To stuff up, or stop by filling up the passages.

It is not probable that any aliment should have the quality of intirely constipating or shutting up the capillary vessels. Arbuth. on Alim.

3. To bind the belly, or make costive.

Omitting honey, which is laxative, and the powder of some loadstones in this, doth rather constipate and bind, than purge and loosen the belly. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CONSTIPA'TION. n. s. [from constipate.]

1. The act of crowding any thing into less room; condensation.

This worketh by the detention of the spirits, and constipation of the tangible parts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It requires either absolute fulness of matter, or a pretty close constipation and mutual contact of its particles. Bentley.

2. Stoppage; obstruction by plenitude.

The inactivity of the gall occasions a constipation of the belly. Arbuth. on Alim.

3. The state of having the body bound.

CONSTI'TUENT. adj. [constituens, Lat.] That which makes any thing what it is; necessary to existence; elemental; essential; that of which any thing consists.

Body, soul, and reason, are the three parts necessarily constituent of a man. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

All animals derived all the constituent matter of their bodies, successively, in all ages, out of this fund. Woodward.

It is impossible that the figures and sizes of its constituent particles, should be so justly adapted as to touch one another in every point. Bentley's Sermons.

CONSTI'TUENT. n. s.

1. The person or thing which constitutes or settles any thing in its peculiar state.

Their first composure and origination requires a higher and nobler constituent than chance. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. That which is necessary to the subsistence of any thing.

The obstruction of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition: for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment. Arbuth. on Alim.

3. He that deputes another; as, the representatives in parliament disregard their constituents.

To CO'NSTITUTE. v. a. [constituo, Lat.]

1. To give formal existence; to make any thing what it is; to produce.

Prudence is not only a moral but christian virtue, such as is necessary to the constituting of all others. Decay of Piety.

2. To erect; to establish.

We must obey laws appointed and constituted by lawful authority, not against the law of God. Taylor's Holy Living.

It will be necessary to consider, how at first those several churches were constituted, that we may understand how in this one church they were all united. Pearson.

3. To depute; to appoint another to an office.

CO'NSTITUTER. n. s. [from constitute.] He that constitutes or appoints.

CONSTITU'TION. n. s. [from constitute.]

1. The act of constituting, enacting, deputing, establishing, producing.

2. State of being; particular texture of parts; natural qualities.

This is more beneficial than any other constitution. Bentley.

This light being trajected through the parallel prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other; and so being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same condition as at first. Newton's Opticks.

3. Corporeal frame.

Amongst many bad effects of this oily constitution, there is one advantage; such who arrive to age, are not subject to stricture of fibres. Arbuth. on Alim.

4. Temper of body, with respect to health or disease.

If such men happen, by their native constitutions, to fall into the gout, either they mind it not at all, having no leisure to be sick, or they use it like a dog. Temple.

Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution. Dryden.

5. Temper of mind.

Dametas, according to the constitution of a dull head, thinks no better way to shew himself wise than by suspecting every thing in his way. Sidney.

Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

He defended himself with undaunted courage, and less passion than was expected from his constitution. Clarendon.

6. Established form of government; system of laws and customs.

The Norman conquering all by might,
Mixing our customs, and the form of right,
With foreign constitutions he had brought. Daniel.

7. Particular law; established usage; establishment; institution.

We lawfully may observe the positive constitutions of our own churches. Hooker.

Constitution, properly speaking in the sense of civil law, is that law which is made and ordained by some king or emperor; yet the canonists, by adding the word sacred to it, make it to signify the same as an ecclesiastical canon. Ayliffe.

CONSTITU'TIONAL. adj. [from constitutio]

1. Bred in the constitution; radical.

It is not probable any constitutional illness will be communicated with the small-pox by inoculation. Sharp's Surgery.

Her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors! you constrain'd and forc'd.
Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

5. To confine; to press.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins.
Dryden.

How the strait stays the slender waist constrain.
Gay.

6. To constringe.

When winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The scanty root can take no steady hold. Dryden.

7. To tie; to bind.

Scarce the weary god had clos'd his eyes,
When rushing on with shouts, he binds in chains
The drowsy prophet, and his limbs constrains.
Dryden.

8. To imprison.

Constrain'd him in a bird, and made him fly
With pr.ty-colour'd plumes, a chatt'ring pye.
Dryden.

9. To force; to produce in opposition to nature.

In this northern tract our hoarser throats
Utter unripe and ill constrained notes. Waller.

10. To restrain; to withhold.

The soft weapons of paternal persuasions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became overweak to resist the first inclination of evil: or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it. Raleigh.

CONSTRA'INABLE. adj. [from constrain.] Liable to constraint; obnoxious to compulsion.

Whereas men before stood bound in conscience to do as reason teacheth, they are now by virtue of human law constrainable; and if they outwardly transgress, punishable. Hooker.

CONSTRA'INEDLY. adv. [from constrain.] By constraint; by compulsion.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obduration in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended. Hooker

CONSTRA'INER. n. s. [from constrain.] He that constrains.

CONSTRA'INT. n. s. [contrainte, Fr.]

1. Compulsion; compelling force; violence; act of overruling the desire; confinement.

I did suppose it should be on constraint;
But, heav'n be thank'd, it is but voluntary.
Shakesp. King John.

Like you, a man; and hither led by fame,
Not by constraint, but by my choice, I came.
Dryden's Indian Emperour.

The constant desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us to act for it, nobody, I think, accounts an abridgment of liberty. Locke.

2. Confinement. Out of use.

His limbs were waxen weak and raw,
Thro' long imprisonment, and hard constraint.
Spenser.

He was not of any delicate contexture; his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Wotton.

Every species, afterwards expressed, was produced from that idea, forming that wonderful contexture of created beings. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Hence 'gan relax
The ground's contexture; hence Tartarian dregs,
Sulphur and nitrous spume, enkindling fierce,
Bellow'd within their darksome caves. Philips.

This apt, this wise contexture of the sea,
Makes it the ships, driv'n by the winds, obey;
Whence hardy merchants sail from shore to shore.
Blackmore.

CONTIGNATION. n. s. [contignatio, Lat.]

1. A frame of beams joined together; a story.

We mean a porch, or cloister, or the like, of one contignation, and not in storied buildings. Wotton's Architecture.
